INTRODUCTORY

PRACTICALITY is a word that appeals to all persons skilled in the application of means to attain particular ends, for practical instruction is the most important part of education, as practical learning aims to impart first, what is necessary; secondly, what is useful, and thirdly, what is ornamental in the development of man.

The best kind of education is unquestionably that acquired through individual effort—by experience, practise, and research. Because learning is more dependent upon the will of man than upon his genius, persons of average talent have overcome deficiencies of nature by labor and perseverance. As an aid to the study of words—a key to their correct spelling, pronunciation, and meaning—the student of language will find FUNK & WAGNALLS PRACTICAL STANDARD DICTIONARY the simplest working tool yet devised to secure a maximum of information in a minimum of time.

Planned as a time-saver, this work is the fruition of a condensation of the labors of nearly 400 experts and specialists who under the editorial supervision of Dr. ISAAC K. FUNK, produced the New Standard Dictionary. The purpose kept constantly in mind in the preparation of this work was to provide a guide for students of language to the meanings of words that govern the interests and studies of men of affairs and women of action, their associates or assistants, in or out of their homes or of their places of business.

Vocabulary.

Condensed as this has been from Funk & Wagnalls New Standard Dictionary, it is not to be considered merely as an abridgment of the larger work. It is that, of course, but that only to a limited degree, for to secure comprehensiveness of statement and clearness of definition it was frequently necessary to rewrite much of the matter to present it in its present condensed form. Necessarily, some part of the exhaustive encyclopedic treatment given to certain of the terms by the unabridged Dictionary has been omitted as being outside of the scope of this volume, but much new matter will be found here for the first time in any dictionary. The work of condensation was done by men long trained in lexicography and the result of their collaboration, presented in the following pages, is the most copious vocabulary ever collected in a book of this size.

Sources of Amplification.

The vocabulary, which includes more than 140,000 terms of all kinds, will be found to be generously full; the definitions, precise as to fact and concise in manner of presentation. This vocabulary, selected with great care from the 450,000 terms contained in Funk & Wagnalls New Standard Dictionary, has been amplified from different sources so as to meet the most exacting needs. Words and phrases belonging to the various arts and sciences were subjected to painstaking examination by specialists, and are explained more fully than in other dictionaries of like range. In order to insure this the Publishers secured the expert collaboration of men in the foremost ranks of their respective sciences who have contributed much original labor and the many new terms required to make of this volume the most up-to-date and the most reliable work of its kind,—

Expert Collaboration.

CHARLES L. BRISTOL, B.S., Ph.D., of New York University; WILLIAM E. FORD, Ph.B., Ph.D., of Yale University; WILLIAM FOSTER, A.B., A.M., Ph.D., of Princeton University; FIELDING H. GARRISON, A.B., M.D., Surgeon General's Office, Washington, D. C.; PETER GUILDAY, Ph.D., of the Catholic University of America; JOHN WM. HARSHBERGER, B.S., Ph.D., of the University of Pennsylvania, and FRANCIS H. MEDHURST, D.Litt., of New York.

Especially may this be said to apply to the terms in anatomy, biology, botany, chemistry, church, ecology, engineering, entomology, forestry, geology, invention, medicine, metallurgy, mineralogy, pathology, petrography, physics, psychology, radiology, radiotelegraphy, radiotelephony, theology, therapeutics, zoology, etc. Terms in finance, insurance, law, printing, real estate, railroading, shipping, and commerce generally are given freely; but no effort has been made to exhaust the sources from which these terms were drawn, as this is only within the province of an unabridged dictionary. The effort has been made to include such terms as are indispensable to these various branches of commerce.

One Alphabetical Order Throughout.

Because the dictionary is consulted as the court of last resort for the spelling, pronunciation, the meaning, and the derivation of words, its contents should be made easily accessible. With this purpose in view, the entire contents of this book have been placed in one alphabetical order—a time-saving feature most cordially endorsed—and thus it differs from all the dictionaries that present their contents in several alphabetical groups as (1) a main vocabulary of English words; (2) a gazetteer of geographical names; (3) a dictionary of biographical names; (4) a dictionary of Christian names; (5) a dictionary of mythological names; (6) a glossary of provincialisms and Scottish terms; (7) a department of abbreviations used in writing and printing; (8) a vocabulary of foreign words and phrases.

The person consulting this book needs to look only in one place for the word sought. If it be not in that place—its proper place in the alphabetical sequence—it is not in the book at all.

New Words.

The innate restlessness of the genius of our language, which through constant changes has inspired its comparison to the ebb and flow of the tide, compels the modern lexicographer to the exercise of that eternal vigilance by which the growth of our daily speech only can be noted. Words newly grown, some actually forced in the hot-houses of the advertising or the business world, are constantly being offered for recognition, and obsolete terms are frequently resuscitated for no other reason than their oddity, or to avoid using the simpler living substitute, so that to-day it is not merely necessary to pick the verbal flowers that spring into being along the highroad of life—that would be a simple task—but one must cull with care and learn all that there is to learn about every one of these products of the Via Verborum before one can determine the quality of their title to admission to the dictionary. A new word should supply a need—fill an antecedent blank—and not be merely a reflex of one already in use unless it has the claim of perspicuity and exactness. It should follow some analogy, or should be composed of elements drawn from the same source.

Because the idiom of to-day—the terminology of the times—may become the literary word of to-morrow those words and terms that have grown in the fields of human activity, and such as are the products of modern civilization and development, have been freely included. And such words as radiogram and vocational have been added, but it is hoped will not produce a storm of protest similar to that which followed the introduction of telegram[1] and educational[2] about sixty years ago. Coleridge pointed out that conscious and strenuous, words which we might find it difficult to get along without to-day, were widely ridiculed before final adoption, and he added, "Shakespeare himself could not prevent the naturalization of accommodation, remuneration, etc., or Swift, the gross abuse even of the word idea."[3]

Among terms of recent adoption or coinage, or having new senses that are recorded are aero-view, amalgam, audiometer, automat, aviatik; bootlegger, bootlegging, Binet age, bingle, book value, chiropractic, coagulen; Dail Eireann, demarche, depth-bomb; Fascisti, flapper, footage; gob, groceteria; hokum, hootch; intelligentsia; jazz-band, judo; milline, mortician; parsec, photostat, pogo, proton; radioamplifier, radiobroadcasting, radiodetector; Sinn Fein, synura; tank, tear-bomb, tear-shell, telautogram, telautograph, telescribe, toddle-top, trench fever vactuphone, vamp, variocoupler, vitamin, etc., etc.

Good Usage.

Because a lexicographer is a recorder of words and of their meanings according to the accepted usage; that is, the usage of the best writers and speakers of his time and of any given time before him, he may serve such as need him to point the way to that which is correct in speech. For this task his experience with words and his occupation peculiarly qualify him, inasmuch as language that is perfectly correct may be misapplied—ludicrously inappropriate and altogether unsuited to the occasion. A slip of speech, whether it be the misuse of a word or even a mispronunciation, has been known to consign a public man to an inferior position and to keep him there.

Common Errors.

To correct some of the common errors made by English-speaking people, even by men and women of considerable education, a number of these have been included in their respective alphabetical places. This number, regulated by the exigencies of space, is necessarily limited, but it will be found that the most glaring examples of faulty diction have been included. They are sufficient to illustrate the different kinds of errors current in our time which careful speakers and writers endeavor to avoid. See an, accept, aluminum, as; bad, bit, blame, but, (conj.), by (prep.); calculate, can, clergy, etc.

Pronunciation and Syllabication.

To determine the correct pronunciation of words for the New Standard Dictionary, an Advisory Committee of twenty-five eminent educators was appointed, the members of which decided questions in doubt. The work of this Committee will be found in the following pages, where the pronunciations recorded reflect the best usage of English speech. In many instances, where two differing pronunciations have an approximately equal weight of authority, both are given, as in the case of such words as advertisement, herb, illustrate, levee, vase, etc. In cases where derivatives are not respelled, the pronunciation is believed to be sufficiently indicated by stress mark and hyphenization, each syllable having the pronunciation of the corresponding syllable in the main word from which the derivative is formed.

The divisions of words permitted by usage, and sanctioned by the practise of typography, are such as are indicated by the stress marks and the hyphens in the vocabulary words or their derivatives or compounds. For a detailed explanation of the rules followed, see pages xi-xii.

Systems of Diacritical Markings Used.

To indicate the pronunciation, two systems of diacritical marks have been used. The first (Key 1), the Revised Scientific Alphabet, was devised by a Committee of the Department of Superintendence of the National Education Association on the basis of The American Philological Association's Alphabet of 1877. It was adopted by that Department at Mobile, Ala., February, 1911, officially endorsed by the three linguistic societies of America, the American Philological Association, the Modern Language Association, and the American Dialect Society, during December, 1912, and is used in the New Standard Dictionary. The Scientific Alphabet has now been in use in dictionaries for more than thirty years.

The second (Key 2) is commonly called the Text-book Key because in one form or another it is used in a number of text-books and the earlier dictionaries. These keys indicate the same sounds but different symbols are used to do this.

The key-words indicating the values of the various symbols for both of the keys used will be found at the top of each page, and to facilitate consultation, guide-words to the first word in vocabulary place on the left-hand page and the last word in vocabulary place on the right-hand page will be found at the outer edge of the upper margin of facing pages. For an Explanation of the Different Systems and Symbols Used to Indicate Pronunciation, see page vii, and the Keys to Pronunciation, page xvi.

Wherever a word is spelled in two or more ways, the simpler form is generally preferred. The forms recommended for use by the American Philological Association and the Simplified Spelling Board will, in

[1]Bulwer-Lytton was among its most vigorous opponents. In his novel "What Will He Do With It?" he went so far as to express his horror through "Colonel Morley" into whose mouth he put the words: "Oh, that I should live to see such a word introduced into the English language!"

[2]In 1856 the Editor of The Literary Churchman, not aware that the word educational was of the Elizabethan period, derided its use as unscholastic, and led Archbishop Trench to remark: "When some twenty years ago an Educational Magazine was started, the first impression on one's mind was, that a work having to do with education should not thus bear upon its front in offensive . . . novelty in the English language."—"English Past and Present," pp. 77–78.

[3]"Notes and Lectures upon Shakespeare," vol. i, pp. 275–276.

general, be found recorded under the regular spelling. These special forms so given are in no case to supersede or obscure the commonly accepted spellings. The simplified spellings recommended by the American Philological Association and the Philological Society of England are marked with a small superior (ᵖ); those recommended by the Simplified Spelling Board are marked with superior (ˢ). These spellings are given sometimes in fully respelled form, sometimes by putting a parenthesis mark before (and, if necessary, after) a letter in the vocabulary spelling which is omitted in the simpler spelling. Thus, ca′pa-bl(e)ᵖ, fys′ĭcᵖ (physic) are spellings recommended by the two philological societies; fo′no-grafˢ, con-serv(e′)ˢ, con-serv(e)d′ˢ, forms recommended by the Simplified Spelling Board—the e being dropped from the last two. Obsolete spellings are indicated by †, and variant forms by ‡.

Spelling.

The plan of defining by definitive statement instead of by synonymous word has been carefully carried out in the present work. The order followed in defining the terms is the order of usage, in which the most common meaning is given first. In this respect the PRACTICAL STANDARD DICTIONARY differs from all other dictionaries which favor the historical order, that is, give first the meanings that words had in bygone centuries, then trace the changes in sense century by century until the meaning of to-day is presented last. In drafting the definitions of all terms, the purpose kept constantly in view was to present the facts in language easy to understand and clear of all possible ambiguity, stating the information simply and directly, bearing in mind the maxim that prompt service is good service, for whoever consults a dictionary needs the information sought immediately, and will favor every work that aims at economy of time. To this end scientific terminology and technicality of expression have been avoided in so far as accuracy will permit.

Definitions by Definitive Statement.

Cant, Colloquialisms, Dialect, Provincialisms, and reputable Slang terms have been admitted whenever they were considered likely to be frequently sought, and the vocabulary has been enriched by the inclusion of a large number of Scottish words and phrases of frequent occurrence in the fiction of the Kail-yard School, and also in that greater field—the literature of the land of Scott and Burns.

Archaic and Obsolete words and senses of words have been retained only when found recorded in the English Classics—the works of that great body of standard authors recommended for study by the "National Conference on Uniform Entrance Requirements in English." These, however, will enable the student to interpret the meanings of any one of the 15,000 to 24,000 words variously computed as representing the total of William Shakespeare's vocabulary, or of the 9,000 to 13,000 credited to John Milton, as well as that terminology peculiar to the writings of Bacon, Jonson, Burton, Butler, Cowley, Bunyan, etc., and to the Bible and the Book of Common Prayer.

To permit the inclusion in this volume of so large a vocabulary the same plan of grouping terms under a parent word, a prefix, base, or stem, or a combining form, as was followed with satisfactory results in the New Standard Dictionary, is adopted here. Frequently the group will be found to contain the primary term and its closely connected compounds and derivatives, thus enabling the student or reader to note the connection and etymological association at a glance.

Grouping.

To indicate promptly and clearly the correct way of writing words derived from proper names, these words, as well as all proper names, are printed with initial capital letters. In the treatment of the terminology of the sciences the aim has been to follow the system of spelling and capitalization recognized as authoritative in each science. Where in any case usage varies, both the capitalized and the non-capitalized forms are indicated.

Capitalization of Words.

The Etymologies will be found more than usually full for a book of this size, and care was taken to reproduce the scholarly work done for this department by Dr. FRANCIS A. MARCH for the New Standard Dictionary. Excursions into the realms of fancy or theory have, in general, not been permitted; only accepted facts are placed on record. Necessarily brief the etymologies will notwithstanding be found to adequately meet the needs of most inquirers.

Compound words consisting of two elemental words, both of which are pronounced in their respective places have not been respelled for pronunciation. For the Method of Compounding Words followed in this book, see page xiii.

The excellent work done in the department of Synonyms, Antonyms, and Prepositions of the New Standard Dictionary by the late Dr. JAMES C. FERNALD has been drawn upon freely for use in the accompanying pages, and supplemented wherever occasion required. The correct use of prepositions is carefully indicated.

Synonyms, Antonyms, and Prepositions.

A number of valuable lists and tables are included, containing matters to which ready and repeated reference is desirable, as of coins, of constellations, planets, and stars, of chemical elements (giving the atomic weight, specific gravity, and fusing- or melting-point of each, with the name of the discoverer and the source from which it is derived), of measures and weights (including a full exposition of the metric system, with factors for conversion), of Presidents of the United States, and Sovereigns of England, and under such words as Latin, law, magnet, magnetic, etc., are lists in the form of run-in definitions characterizing the various types or divisions in the several subjects.

Lists and Tables.

The textual and full-page illustrations, produced under the efficient supervision of Mr. RUDOLPH E. LEPPERT, were chosen with a view to supplementing the definitions. The quality of the work done shows a marked advance upon anything of the kind hitherto attempted elsewhere. Attention is particularly invited to the full-page illustrations of armor, fish, insects, man, the metric system, mushrooms, plants, reptiles, and radio (or wireless) telephony, reproduced under the supervision of the RADIO CORPORATION OF AMERICA. Of the textual figures those of aeroplane and hydroaeroplane, carburization, hand-grenade (reproduced by permission and with the assistance of the WAR DEPARTMENT), military uniforms will be found to present with much precision details of construction or of evolution that can not be explained by brief definition alone.

Biographical Terms. The selection of personal names included will be found to be especially rich and timely. Those of public men and women whose achievements have brought them into prominence or who have won international fame—the workers in the fields of humanity, the famous Pontiffs and Sovereign Rulers, the Presidents, the Princes of the Church or State, the great ambassadors, eminent judges, and distinguished advocates, the prelates and clergy, the Nobel prize-winners, the commanders in the field or on the sea, the statesmen and scientists, educators, painters and poets, authors, editors, discoverers, explorers, inventors, etc.—are recorded with the dates of their births, and if deceased, also of their deaths, their nationality and achievements. Famous figures in mythology have been added freely, as leading characters of the Greek, Roman, and other classic literatures. Bible and Christian names, and their meanings, are freely reported.

World War. The stirring events of the World War, which brought into prominence many persons, places, and things, have been duly recorded. The names of the devastated cities of Belgium and of France, the battlefields of Flanders and Picardy, the shell-torn countryside, the shattered bridges and massifs, the razed forests, the broken Hindenburg line, the wiped-out salients—all these are in their appropriate alphabetical places, together with the names of those implements of warfare that spread death and destruction where peace had reigned for more than forty years.

Geographical Terms. In the field of geography care has been exercised to present all the latest facts. The remodeling of Europe required under the terms of peace by the various treaties signed, or tacitly accepted, by the defeated belligerent nations is carefully noted, and the new Kingdoms and recently formed republics are given their respective places. For the first time in any dictionary of the English tongue the Saor Stat or Free State of Ireland finds record; and side by side are included Azerbaijan, Czecho-Slovakia, the Kingdom of Egypt, the Kingdom of Hejaz, the Republics of Latvia, Nakichevan, Poland, etc., and the Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes that has become more popularly known as Jugo-Slavia.

Census. The statistics of population of the United States, for cities of 10,000 and upwards, based on the reports of the Fourteenth United States Census (1920) will be found recorded in their appropriate places, as well as those of the Dominion of Canada for 1921 as far as officially announced by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, Ottawa; those of Great Britain, including England, Scotland, and Wales, as published by the Registrars General of the Census, August, 1921; those of the French census for 1921; those of the Statistical Bureau of Germany, published 1920; those of Japan for 1920, and those of such other nations as have issued official reports, as the Argentine Republic, the Australian Commonwealth, and the Dominion of New Zealand, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Chile, etc.

Foreign Words and Phrases. The department of Foreign Words and Phrases used in English literature is unusually full, and because these phrases are drawn from various languages of Europe they form a separate section.

Personal Acknowledgments. To the Experts, who have contributed greatly to the merits of this book, and to the editors associated with him in his work, especially to EDWARD F. DONOVAN, LL.B., and GEORGE C. HARVEY, B. A., as well as to the other members of the editorial staff who gave material help, the writer expresses his heartfelt thanks.

Acknowledging that the duty of the lexicographer is to serve, to the best of his ability, the Public for whom his work is designed, the writer ventures to express the hope that this volume will adequately meet the needs of all students of the language, as well as those of that larger body of persons—the General Public—who may require an accurate, handy, and compact practical guide to words in the English tongue.

NEW YORK, April 6, 1922. F. H. V.

EXPLANATION OF THE DIFFERENT SYSTEMS OF SYMBOLS USED TO INDICATE PRONUNCIATION

CORRECT PRONUNCIATION depends on the consensus of usage. The correctness of English pronunciations should obviously be determined by the best and widest usage among the English-speaking peoples. To a mode of pronouncing a word that is general among the educated classes of all these peoples no exception can properly be taken, and any form of orthoepy that prevails among some of these peoples should command the recognition of lexicographers. Even forms that are used by a few only of the greater speakers may sometimes call for consideration at least, and possibly for record. One recognized aim of a dictionary is to ascertain and record the facts of English usage in pronouncing, while at the same time indicating what it regards as the best usage.

The first respelled pronunciation indicates the preference of this book in each case.

As two systems to indicate pronunciations are used, two keys to the symbols employed are utilized and described in detail. The basic principle of the first system—Key 1—is the use of the fundamental vowels in their original Roman values. The chief characteristic of this key is that it employs only one symbol for one sound throughout its alphabet—a distinguishing feature that reduces the number of symbols required to indicate pronunciation to a minimum. In these respects Key 1 differs from Key 2, which uses from two to four symbols for the same sound, as shown on page xvi.

Each of the figures printed before the pronunciations (as, Aar: 1 ār; 2 är) in the following pages indicates the Key to the symbols used to show the pronunciation. Guide-words indicating the sounds of the two keys used are given at the top of the page except page 1, where they are given at the bottom.

For the purpose of explaining how the symbols of Key 1 are used, and how their use is related to the more important variations of English pronunciation, these symbols are considered below:

The Symbols Used for the Unstressed Vowels in Key 1

It is one of the characteristics of the English language that unstressed vowels are more or less "obscured" in the utterance. This is especially the case in the syllable just before or just after the primary accent. Thus the middle syllable of monarchy, misery, primary, martyrdom is pronounced by most speakers with the same vowel. This vowel Key 1 denotes by the symbol ə. Some speakers disapprove the ə sound which the many pronounce; thus, some make a point of saying rek′ərd instead of rek′ərd. But if there are such differences of usage and opinion, a symbol is needed by which they can be clearly indicated to the eye.

If there were but one unstressed vowel in English there would be no need of a symbol for it, however variously the usual spelling might denote it. But there are several; and one in particular appears in such a variety of spellings that it is best to have a symbol for that also. This is the vowel heard in the last syllable of habit, candid, and in the first syllable of renew.

If the second vowel of habit were always written i, one could dispense with a special symbol for it and ignore the difference between the i of bit and the i of habit. Again, if the vowel in question were always written e, as it is in the first syllable in renew, depress, etc., one could get along with e. But one does not like to write valley as vale, or city as cite; nor does one wish to respell palace, agate, average, as pales, aget, averej, or captain as kapten, when it is stated expressly that e has the sound of e in met.

As the vowel under consideration is really a half-fledged or imperfectly formed i, it is denoted by an i without the dot—ɪ.

Aside from ə and ɪ, there are no unstressed vowels that seem to require special symbols. See §§13, 14, below.

The Vowels and Diphthongs of Key 1

The symbols are: ɑ, ā, a, ă, ɑ, e, ē, i, ĭ, o, ō, ɵ, ō, u, ū, ʊ, ō, ɑi, ɑu, iu, iū, ɵi, ə, ɪ.

(1) ɑ and ā.

These denote the vowels which occur chiefly before r; thus, ɑ in artistic, cartoon, and ā in art, hard, garden, calm, alms, father. Most often the unstressed ar becomes ər, as in separate, monarchy. There is some variation in the length of ā; thus, it is longer in mart than in martyr, longer in garden than in garter, but in respelling, ā is used wherever the vowel is notably longer than in artistic.

(2) a and ă.

These denote the vowel heard short, in bat, cap, lack, and long in bare, fair, pear, heir. Many speakers pronounce the vowel of bear, fare, etc. (ă before r), a little higher than that of bat, so that it sounds very much like the prolongation of the e in met, very. Further, a is regularly prolonged before a voiced consonant in monosyllables, especially if they bear the sentence-accent. Thus in "Stand, villain, stand!" the vowel of stand is long; in standing it is half-long, and in inkstand it is short.

(3) ɑ.

This letter is used for a vowel which varies between a and ɑ, or between ă and ā. It occurs before f, s, th, sometimes before n + consonant. Examples: ask, glass, past, basket, laugh, after, quaff, bath, path, aunt, lancet, dance, France. The prevailing vowel in the south of England is ā, in the United States ă. The ancestor of both sounds is ultimately ɑ, which rose to a in very early times and then, in the seventeenth century, became ā before a voiceless fricative, and sometimes before n + consonant. Thus the words which had been ask, pɑth, became āsk, pāth.

Refined speakers make a virtue of pronouncing an intermediate vowel, higher than ā but not so high as ă. It is this that is denoted by ɑ. It is generally long, but may be short in unstressed syllables, as wine-glass, cow-path, or half-long in words of more than one syllable, as basket, pastime. The symbol ɑ is used to indicate that the pronunciation varies; thus, the respelling baṯh means that the word may be either bāṯh or bāth, or as claimed by some phoneticists between the two

(4) e and ē.

Of these, e usually stands for the open short vowel of met, as in set, ten, well, wealth, said, says, leopard, heifer, very, merry, bury, confess, outlet, and ē for the close long of may, as in bay, bail, they, veil, fate, great, taste, savior, danger, aorta, magnate. But e is used also for the open sound when lengthened before a voiced consonant in emphatic monosyllables, as in beg, blend, says; and ē for the close sound when shortened in an unstressed syllable, as in magnate, aerial. So, too, in French and Spanish words, ē is used for the close short vowel of an unstressed syllable; thus, Médoc, Leon are respelled mē″dok′, lē-ōn′.

Many speakers make ē a diphthong, the first element being a little higher than e, the second a little lower than i. Such familiar spellings as veil, skein, rein are a fairly exact rendering of this pronunciation.

(5) i and ī.

Of these, i usually denotes the open short vowel of sit, as in hit, bid, fill, busy, hymn, build, spirit, tin, delirious, misfit, and ī the close long of seat, as in marine, police, lean, me, piece, seen, scene, Cæsar, Peter, people, fear, belief, receipt, athlete, regent, Socrates. But i is also used for the open sound when prolonged in emphatic monosyllables before a voiced consonant, as in bid, big, sinned; and ī for the close sound when shortened in an unstressed syllable, as in Eolian, athlete.

(6) o and ō.

Of these, o, the short sound, occurs only in unstressed syllables, as in obey, poetic, elbow, rotation, Bohemian, hero, shadow, potato. Except when final, and especially before r, it is apt to become ə; thus, original, agony, history are often heard as ə-rij′ı-nəl, ag′ə-nı, his′tə-rı. Careful speakers, however, still pronounce o-rij′ı-nəl, ag′o-nı, his′to-rı. In New England dialect o, instead of the usual ō, is sometimes heard in coat, road, stone. The long sound is often diphthongal, in the south of England regularly so. The first element of the diphthong is a little less rounded than o, being virtually identical with ɵ. This is then further rounded during the act of utterance and ends in the labial semivowel. Such familiar words as boat, note, go, pour, motion, devote, shoulder, know, illustrate this pronunciation.

(7) ɵ and ō.

Of these, the vowel ɵ differs from o in being less rounded, more open. It is heard short in not, odd, what, was. The words or, for, nor, Au′gust, author, awl, call, bought, caught, door, ford, lost, off, moss, cloth, pork, etc., have ō when emphatic; when unemphatic, either ɵ or, rarely, ə. What is popularly called "short o," the vowel of hot, not, pop, etc., is historically the more open, slightly rounded vowel ɵ, and is still so pronounced in England. In some parts of the United States, however, the ɵ has almost completely lost its rounding, so that hot, not, pop are usually heard as hɑt, nɑt, pɑp. In southern English ō and ō are not usually distinguished before r, but come together in a vowel which is between the two; thus, mourning and morning are pronounced alike. So, too, the vowel of story, which we denote by ō, is in southern English half-way between ō and ō.

(8) u and ū.

In these there is a difference of quality as well as of quantity, ū as in rule, rude, blue, lute (see below, under iū), pool, mood, balloon, ghoul, soup, détour, being a little more rounded than u as in full, push, pull, put, handful, could, hood, manhood, issue. In the interest of simplicity u is used both for the stressed vowel of full and for the unstressed vowel of value (val′yu), but they are not exactly identical. The u of the ending -ture varies between ə, u, and iū, nature being heard as nē′ċhər or nē′ċhur, and literature as lit′ər-ə-ċhūr or lit′ər-ə-tiūr, or sometimes lit′ər-ə-ċhur or lit′ər-ə-ċhə(r).

(9) ʊ and ū.

The symbol ʊ denotes the so-called "short u" of but, cut, buzz, fund, gunned, insult, blood, rough, which is much more common than u. It is apt to be prolonged before a voiced consonant in emphatic monosyllables, as in buzz, fund. But this long ʊ, which easily takes care of itself, is left without a symbol, ū being used for a vowel of slightly different quality, heard only before r. In the ordinary spelling ū is denoted in a variety of ways, as burn, learn, fern, urn, girl, whorl, return, concern.

(10) ai and au.

The symbol ai is used for the diphthong commonly but erroneously called "long i," as in aisle, kaiser, rite, right, ibex, sleight, cry, die, dye, and au for that heard in sauerkraut, now, thou, bough. In both symbols the first element varies somewhat. In parts of the United States house is not pronounced haus, but haus, or even heus, but au may be regarded as normal.

(11) iu and iū.

What is popularly called "long u," as in tube, is denoted by iū, as in cute, dew, few, feud, suit, lure, mutual, and iu is used for the same sound when shortened in an unstressed syllable, as in mutation, curator, duration, mulatto, superior. In southern English regularly, and to some extent in the United States, the sound is a diphthong consisting of a fully rounded ū as in pool, preceded by the palatal semivowel. This pronunciation would properly be denoted by yū; thus, for tube, Tuesday, we should have tyūb, tyūz′dı, rather than tiūb, tiūz′dı. But many speakers, probably the majority of Americans, pronounce tube and Tuesday without the palatal semivowel and with a u-sound slightly less rounded than the ū of pool. This pronunciation is not well represented either by tyūb, tyūz′dı, or by tūb, tūz′dı. It is this u-sound, which may or may not be diphthongal, that is denoted by iū. To a certain extent this sound is heard even after r and l, where no y is pronounced. Thus lute (liūt) is distinguished from loot (lūt).

(12) ɵi.

The symbol ɵi is used for the diphthong heard in oil, avoid, choice, noise, hoist, alloy, boy, toy.

The Unstressed Vowels of Key 1

(13) ə.

The symbol ə may be called the low unstressed vowel, ɪ being the high. The position of the tongue in uttering it is nearly the same as for ʊ, but the difference between ə and ʊ is clearly audible in such pairs as sup, hyssop; luck, hillock; sum, winsome. Almost any vowel, especially any low vowel, tends to become ə when unsupported by the stress. The tendency toward ə is stronger in southern English than in northern. In the United States there is a difference of usage in the pronunciation of certain endings, notably -or, -tor, and -ment, ɵ or e being heard in formal utterance, ə in ordinary speech. Thus, senator, monument, president are ordinarily sen′ə-tər, mən′yu-mənt, prez′ɪ-dənt, but in more formal utterance sen′ə-tər, mɵn′yu-ment, prez′ɪ-dent. The great majority of the common unstressed endings have ə, with little or no variation of usage. Compare urban, gallant, balance, potence, potent, quotient, potion, kingdom. The unstressed prefixes ad- (ac-, af-, al-, an-, as-), ob- (oc-, of-, op-), con- (col-, com-, cor-), sub- (suc-, sup-, sur-, sus-) often have ə in common speech, but the distinct vowel is heard in more formal or precise utterance, altho much shortened.

(14) ɪ.

This sound results from the weakening of a high front vowel when unsupported by the stress. It occurs in obscure syllables having i, y, e, or a in the regular spelling, as in ability, city, Sunday, visible, difficult, renew, debate, palace, which are respelled as ə-bil′ɪ-tɪ, sit′ɪ, sun′dɪ, viz′ɪ-bl, dif′ɪ-kult, rɪ-niū′, dɪ-bēt′, pal′ɪs.

An unstressed medial i in words of Latin origin is apt to vary in pronunciation between ɪ and ə; thus, visible, difficult, agitate are heard now as viz′ɪ-bl, dif′ɪ-kult, aj′ɪ-tēt, and now as viz′ə-bl, dif′ə-kult, aj′ə-tēt. Careful speakers prefer the former pronunciation; but the other, altho unapproved, is very common in ordinary conversation.

Certain combinations of consonants tend to prevent i from becoming ɪ; thus the ending -ism is always -izm, never -ɪzm. The ending -ist, when immediately following the primary stress, as in tyrist, is frequently -ɪst; in the second remove, as in fabulist, Darwinist, the i is more distinctly pronounced.

The Consonants and Semivowels of Key 1

The symbols are: b, d, f, g, ŋ, h, j, ć̇h, k, l, m, n, p, r, s, ṥh, t, ć̇h, th, v, w, y, z, ʒ. Of these, b, d, f, h, k, p, t, v, z have the familiar and unmistakable sounds heard in be, do, fee, he, key, pea, tea, vow, zest; g sounds always as in get, never as in gem, and s always as in sit, never as in rose or in sugar. These eleven letters, then, require no further explanation.

(1) ŋ.

This denotes the guttural nasal heard in sing, singer. It is a simple sound, not a compound of n and g. The ng of finger is composed of ŋ + g (fiŋ′gər), the nk of bank of ŋ + k (baŋk).

(2) ć̇h and j.

These denote, respectively, the composite consonants heard voiceless in chew and voiced in jaw. Phoneticians analyze the former as consisting of t + ṥh, the latter as consisting of d + ʒ. The presence of a t and d is recognized by the ordinary spelling in such words as batch, badge. It is to be observed, however, that ć̇h does not consist of a complete t as in tin followed by a complete sh as in ship, but rather of a variety of t followed by a variety of sh. The elements blend in such a way that each loses a part of its phonetic character, and the result is virtually a simple sound. In the sentence that shall never be, no matter how rapidly one may speak it, the words that shall never make an exact rime to satchel, as they would do if ć̇h were exactly t + ṥh. A similar statement would hold of the equation j = d + ʒ. It is this consideration which justifies the retention of the familiar symbols, in lieu of tsh and dʒ, for these sounds.

(3) l, m, n, r.

The initial sound of let, met, net, red, and the final sound of able, prism, fasten, flour, are denoted by these letters respectively. The final sounds are called syllabic l, m, n, r, it being a peculiarity of these open consonants that they may partake of the nature of a vowel and form a syllable. In the case of many words in -al, -el, -an, -en, etc., there is a difference of pronunciation: thus some pronounce metal, pedal, idol as met′əl, ped′əl, ɑi′dəl, while others do not distinguish these words from mettle, peddle, idle. On account of this divergent utterance it is often hard to say what the prevailing usage is—whether -əl, -əm, -ən, or simply syllabic l, m, n; but the tendency is toward the latter. In the ordinary spelling, syllabic m appears as simple m in -ism, chasm, prism, and some other words, but as -am in madam, Adams, as -om in bottom, etc. Syllabic r appears as r sometimes after a long vowel or diphthong, as in flour, but after a consonant always as -ar, -er, -or, etc. Such words are respelled -ər, as riv′ər, mūr′tər, not riv′r, mūr′tr, etc.

(4) ṥh and ʒ.

These are the signs employed, respectively, for the voiceless and voiced palatal sibilant heard in ship, azure. On the analogy of ṥh a tied zh might seem to be the logical symbol for the voiced sound, but, unlike sh, zh has no currency in English spelling. As this latter is a simple sound, it is represented by ʒ.

(5) ƭh and th.

These letters are simply a concession to English visual habit and take the place of the Anglo-Saxon þ and ð, now usually employed in phonetic alphabets. They have the sound of th in thin and th in this respectively.

(6) w and y.

These have the sounds of w in wet and y in yet, respectively. Neither is used as the final element of a diphthong. Such spellings as blow, blowing, say, saying appear as blō, blō′iŋ, sē, sē′iŋ.

(7) ṅ, ʜ, and ü.

These special symbols are used for the following purposes: ṅ to denote the nasality of a preceding vowel; ʜ to denote the Scottish ch in loch (German ch, whether voiced or voiceless, guttural or palatal); and ü for the French u (German ü), whether long or short.

The Symbols Used in Key 2—The System of Notation Known as the Text-book Key

The Unstressed Vowels of Key 2

To indicate the unstressed vowels of obscured syllables the unmarked vowel letters are used corresponding to ə and ɪ of Key 1. See §§ 13 and 14, above. An exception is made in the use of o for the obscure sound in closed syllables, as in kingdom, and for the o in obey, history, where the sound of ō is heard lessened in quantity. In closed syllables having the sound of o as in obey, seldom in English words, ō is used in Key 2. Thus, in the German pronunciation of Humboldt, the second syllable is given as -bōlt in Key 1, -bōlt in Key 2.

The Vowels of Key 2

In Key 2 the vowels marked with a macron represent the sounds now commonly called long, and those with a breve represent the sounds commonly called short. The two diacritics indicate, except for the letter o, actual difference in quality of sound, not merely in quantity. The various letter-sounds are described above and in the articles treating the letters in alphabetical place in the vocabulary. References follow to the divisions (1), (2), etc., of the section "THE VOWELS AND DIPHTHONGS OF KEY 1," above, for the sounds of the marked vowels. The uses of the unmarked vowels are explained in the preceding paragraph.

The originators of Key 2 did not provide for the distinction of quantity indicated in Key 1 by the symbols ɑ and ɑ̄, using the symbol ä as the sole sign for the difference of length in the sounds of a heard in artistic (ɑ) and in art (ɑ̄).

For ä as in art, see (1).
For ā as in fate, see (4). For ă as in fat, see (2).
For â as in bare, see (2). For à as in ask, see (3).
For ą as in what and ą̄ as in all, see (7). These are the same as ɵ and ō of Key 1, ŏ and ô of Key 2.
For ē as in me, see (5).
For ĕ as in met and ę as in fête, see (4). The sound of ę is the same as that of ā.
For ê as in bear, the same sound as â, see (2).
For ē as in fern, see (9).
For ī as in tin, see (5). For ĭ as in bite, see (10).
For ī as in girl, see (9). This is the same as û and ē.
For ĭ as in marine, the same sound as ē, see (5).
For ō as in go, see (6). For ŏ as in not and ô as in corn, see (7).
For ọ as in woman, o͞o as in boot, and o͝o as in book, see (8). These are sounds more commonly represented in regular spelling by u as in full and ū as in rude.
For ȯ as in son, the same sound as ŭ, see (9).
For ọ as in tomb, the same sound as u̧, see (8).
For ū as in cute, see (11). This is the sound noted in Key 1 by iū or iu (internal) and yū or yu (initial). Only the internal sound is noted by ū in Key 2, length being disregarded.
For ŭ as in cut and û as in burn, see (9).
For u̧ as in put and u̧ as in rule, see (8).
For the diphthongs ou, ow, see (10), and for oi, oy, see (12).
In Key 2 y is used as a vowel exactly like i

The Consonants of Key 2

Consonant sounds are the same in both keys, with the following exceptions: In Key 2 the digraphs ch, sh, th as in thin, and zh are without the tie-mark used in Key 1. See "THE CONSONANTS AND SEMI-VOWELS OF KEY 1," §§ (2), (4), and (5).
For th, as in this, see (5). For j, see (2).
For ng as in sing and n̰ as in ink, see (1).
In Key 2 the k-sound of c̰ is noted by ɕ and the s-sound by ç. These are always k and s in Key 1.

The Marking of the Quantity of Vowels

By the quantity of a vowel is meant the relative amount of time taken in uttering it. It is necessary to say the "relative" time, since no absolute unit of measurement is practicable. A close observer may grade vowels as very long, long, medium, short, and very short. Almost any one, with a little attention to the subject, may hear the three grades, long, medium, and short. For ordinary purposes, however, it suffices to distinguish graphically only the two grades, long and short. Unfortunately notions of quantity have come to be mixed up in the general mind with notions of quality. Thus one hears of the "long a" of paste and the "short a" of past, when both vowels are long. The vowel of met is called "short e" and that of mete "long e"; but the real long of the e in met, while common in some other languages, is little used in English, altho one may hear it at least half-long when it is followed by a voiced consonant in an accented syllable, as in beg, says, blend. So, too, the real short of the e in mete is very rare in English, but it may be heard in the first syllable of Eolian. What is called "long u" is generally a diphthong having no quantitative relation whatever to the so-called "short u" of but. In brief, the words "long" and "short," as popularly used to define vowel-quantity, are meaningless and misleading.

Now, in any phonetic notation it is important to have a sign of length that means prolongation. In the keys that follow, the macron is used primarily as a sign of simple length; in Key 1 it connotes also a slight difference of quality. Thus, magnate is respelled as mag'nēt, but the e is not really long—not much, if any, longer than the stressed e of magnetic (mag-net'ik). Similar compromises are made in a few other cases—always for the sake of simplicity.

In the pronunciations recorded in this work, principal stress is indicated by a single or prime accent (′) and secondary stress by a double accent (″).

ON THE DIVISION OF WORDS

In writing and printing, words are divided into syllables which are formed according to certain rules based upon a sound, or a combination of sounds, uttered together, or at a single impulse of the voice. These syllables may constitute a word, or a part of a word, but there are some words, which when spoken consist of two sounds that can not be separated into syllables because no syllable can be formed without the aid of a vowel. For example, chaos is a dissyllabic word and is divided cha'os, but chasm pronounced as if spelled chas'um, can not be divided because the second element of the word lacks the necessary vowel. Other words undividable for the same reason are prism and spasm.

Certain other terms contain the necessary vowels to enable one to form two syllables but usage has treated these as monosyllabic, hence they are never divided: ail, pronounced a'il; flour, pronounced flow'er; hour, pronounced ow'er. There are many other words in the monosyllabic class that contain two vowels, but these are inseparable, as ai in "pain," pronounced pane; ea in "beak," pronounced beek; ei in "eight," pronounced ate; ie in "brief," pronounced breef, etc. In some other words the stress of voice isolates a symbol, as at the end of a word, as in fluff'y, flum'mer-y, murk'y, mys'ter-y.

In this dictionary the divisions generally represent pronunciation. They were determined partly by physiological laws of motion to produce the proper sounds, partly by movement of purpose to bring out the thought. But there are frequent combinations of letters in which more than one division may be made that will equally give the correct sounds and observe the physiological laws. In such cases the division chosen is one that will exhibit the significant parts of the word most plainly.

The Practical Standard Dictionary gives de-struc'tive, cor'mo-rant, fir'ma-ment, les'son, and pas'sive, to represent the correct pronunciation of these words and in conformity with the law for the use of consonants. There is no well-known root de-struct', no foundation word firm'a-ment, no corm'o-rant, no less'on or pass'ive to require that etymology join hands with pronunciation. It divides ex-pen'sive, de-fen'sive, and other words in silent e, preceded by ns, on the n, because so pronounced and the spelling is changed by the omission of the silent e. The accent in form'a-tive and for-ma'tion causes a different pronunciation and consequently a different syllabication. The same may be said of the contrast in ser'vile and ser-vil'i-ty. In the division into syllables of the words armor, harbor, normal, the Practical Standard adheres to its rule of correct pronunciation. It divides on a long accented vowel and throws the consonants to the following syllable, while it joins a short vowel to its following consonant, when this can be done without misrepresenting the pronunciation. In the words eastern, master, etc., the st of east is by etymology and pronunciation joined to ea; therefore, east'ern. Mas'ter is one who rules, mast'er is a vessel with a certain number of masts, so divided by etymology, and this division does not misrepresent the pronunciation

Rules for the Division of Words

The following rules are now commonly used in dividing English words.

Prefixes, such as ab-, ad-, ante-, anti-, auto-, bi-, co-, com-, de-, demi-, di-, dis-, em-, en-, equi-, im-, in-, mis-, multi-, out-, per-, pre-, pro-, re-, sub-, super-, trans-, un-, are usually separated from the parent word, as in ab-ject, ad-mire, ante-cedent, ante-chamber, auto-mobile, bi-sect, co-operate, com-mensurate, de-press, demi-god, di-late, dis-locate, em-brace, em-power, en-close, en-fold, equi-valent, im-press, in-different, mis-deed, multi-form, out-burst, out-cast, out-side, per-ennial, per-fect, pre-amble, pre-cipitate, pre-cocious, pro-digal, pro-log, re-peat, re-pose, re-surrection, sub-acid, sub-divide, sub-marine, super-natural, super-pose, trans-fer, trans-mit, un-born, un-avoidable, etc.

Suffixes, such as -able, -ant, -ent, -ed, -er, -est, -eth, -ible, -ing, -ish, -ist, -ize [-ise], etc., are usually separated from the parent word, as in charit-able, cap-able, assist-ant, eleg-ant, inf-ant, ten-ant, absorb-ent, presid-ent, provid-ent, prud-ent, beard-ed, round-ed, bick-er, clamb-er, flick-er, dear-est, full-est, hard-est, soon-est, lay-eth, say-eth, ed-ible, forc-ible, bind-ing, clear-ing, feel-ing, reckon-ing, clown-ish, fool-ish, anatom-ist, pian-ist, public-ist, pugil-ist, apolog-ize, catech-ize, civil-ize, critic-ize. See -ise, -ize.

Exceptions:. horned, pressed, ruined.

When a suffix or an attached syllable requires that the final consonant of the stem be doubled, the doubled letter is added to the suffix, as allott, allot-ting; confer, confer-rable; glad, glad-den; rob, rob-ber.

The Vowels: 1. When two vowels that come together are sounded separately, each belongs to a different syllable; for instance, abey-ance, a-eroplane, a-orist, ba-obab (a Central African tree), buoy-ancy, cow-ard, cow-er, coy-ote, di-al, ortho-epy, sci-ence.

2. When two vowel letters form a diphthong, as ai in "aisle," ei in "either," oi in "oil," ou in "out," or two, or more than two letters, make a digraph or trigraph, as ck in "sick," ea in "each," eau in "beau," gh in "cough," gn in "consign," ng in "bring," ph in "physic," sch in "schedule," sci in "science," sh in "ash," ss in "caress," th in "thin," they are considered as single vowels or consonants, as the case may be, and are not separable.

3. When the preceding vowel is short and accented it attracts the adjacent consonant, as in admon'-ish; hab'it, hab-it'ual; proph'et, prophet'ic; wom'an.

4. An unaccented short vowel attracts the following consonant, as in ad-ductor, dis-arm, en-amor, im-agine. See Prefixes.

5. Unaccented or short or obscure vowels in an unaccented syllable of a root-word usually attract the consonant that follows, as in confection-ary, custom-ary, diction-ary, vision-ary.

6. An accented long vowel attracts the following consonant, as in al'der, al'derman; mak'er.

The Consonants: 1. A consonant, digraph, or trigraph, occurring between two vowels, is attracted by the later syllable when the first vowel is long, one-half long, or obscure, except in beau'ti-ful, ca-pac'i-ty, fa'tal, fa'ther, fa'vor, fed'er-al, pe-cu'liar, pro'gram, rea'son, sea'son, sed'a-tive, sep'a-rate.

2. Two or more consonants coming together, beginning a syllable, and occurring between two sounded vowels, are joined to the second vowel (1) when the first is long and accented or when capable of use to end an unaccented syllable; a'blest, au'thor, bu'gler, con'tract, cy'clone, di'graph, ha'tred, ker'chief, neu'tral, fee'ble, peo'ple, psy'chic, trem'bling, etc.; or, (2) when the second vowel occurs in an accented syllable; as, a-cros'tic, a-sleep', a-stride', a-thwart', be-strew', be-stride', de-scend', de-scrib'ing, de-scrip'tion, hy-drau'lic, re-proof', re-spect', etc.

3. When two or more consonants come together between two vowel-sounds, one of the consonants is attracted to the accented syllable, whether the vowel be short or long; as, ab-rupt', ab-sorb', ag'nate, al'ba-tross, ar'chi-tect, at'las, can'did, es-pe'cial, es-teem', mag'net, om-nis'cience, res'cue, etc.

4. When two or more consonants, that can not begin a syllable when used together, occur between two sounded vowels, they are separable, and one or two of them join the first vowel, be it long or short, as in an'cient, an'gel, ar'chi-tec''ture, buck'le, bur'glar, cam'bric, con''ver-sa'tion, dis-ci'ple, dis-claim', whis'tle, etc.

Exceptions: When the spelling and accentuation of the parent or root-word is retained and the meaning is a derived one, the rule does not hold; as in art, art'ist; bank, bank'er; Celt, Celt'ic; dance, danc'ing; fish, fish'ery, etc.

5. When the consonantal digraphs sc, sp, and st, and the trigraph str occur preceding or following an accented syllable, they are separated, as in sus-cep'tible, aus-pi'cious, cus'pi-dor, sus-pect', cas'tle (but not cast'er), mas'ter, oys'ter, pas'time, aus'tral.

6. The consonantal digraph st is inseparable in certain dissyllabic words, as blast-ed, boast-ed, coast-ing, east-ern, fast-ing, feast-ed, post-ed, etc.

7. Some consonants, as c, ç, d, g, s, sc, t and z, do not end syllables because the vowels, or combinations of vowels, with which they are inseparably associated produce the sounds of ch, j, sh, or zh. For example, sibilant c as in invin'cible and "soft" g as in exi-gencies, spe'cious, sol'dier, conta'gious, spe'cial, con'scious, injudi'cious, condi'tion, glu'zier. But the exceptions are numerous, as when the letters occur before a true suffix, as -ed, -er, and -ing, as in fast, fast-ed; charge, charg-er; cage, cag-ing; or, when without another consonant following a short accented vowel, as in dig'it, log'ic, mag'ic, or when occurring in dg, as in ac-knowl'edg-ment and judg'ment. The derivatives of the word right are also exceptions:—right'eous, right'eously, right'eousness; right'ful, right'fully, right'fulness.

8. When the consonants d, s, t, z, are so influenced by u as to produce the sounds ch, j, sh or zh they do not end a syllable. Examples: proce'dure, sen'sual, fea'ture, sei'zure, su'ture, ver'dure. When a preceding short vowel is accented it attracts the consonant modified, as in az'ure, cas'ual, congrat'u-late, ed'ucate, nat'ural, pleas'ure. Exception: fraud'u-lent.

9. The consonants that do not begin a syllable are (1) r when it follows a or e, as in bare, bar'er, bar'est; bear, bear'er; care, car'ing; fare, far'ing; fear, fear'ing, fear'ful; aver'age; bev'er-age; gen-er'al, etc. (2) x when it is pronounced ks or gz, as in anx'ious, com-plex'ion, ex-am'i-na'tion, ex-am'ple.

10. When l, n, or v are followed by i, sounded as consonantal y, they do not, according to Webster, begin a syllable, but according to the New Standard Dictionary they do. See a'lien, fo'lio, con-ve'nient, pe-cu'liar, be-ha'vior, etc.

11. Compound words are divided into syllables even as the words of which they are formed are divided, as air-way, all-spice, awe-struck, back-bone, blue-bon-net, book-bind-er, book-sel-ler, etc.

12. The final consonants are b, d, f, g, l, m, n, p, r, t, z, as the following words will serve to illustrate: abb, ebb; add, odd; biff, bluff, buff; egg; ball, cell. sill, boll, bull; Finn, inn, jinn; Lapp; err, burr, purr; sett, bitt, butt; buzz, fizz, jazz.

Method of Compounding Words

Condensed from Mr. F. Horace Teall's treatise for Funk & Wagnalls New Standard Dictionary.

Professor W. D. Whitney, in his book on The Life and Growth of Language, speaks of "a process which the general history of language shows to be more important than any other," and then says: "It is the composition of words, the putting of two independent elements together to form a single designation." He shows distinctly that he includes here the union of word-pairs with a hyphen by citing rest-day, learning-knights, and head-dress. This is stated as a general language fact, not merely as English.

In such matters the lexicographer's record must show selection, especially in English, and undoubtedly that selection should accord with the best usage, as decided by some person or body of persons. Some persons, especially printers, say that fashions change in such matters so that what was once good is so no longer; but this is only an evidence of the common confusion, which is and has been always present in practise, and the forms selected originally are still held to be the best.

Every important dictionary of the English language published before 1890, and every one since then except one, has included thousands of word-pairs joined with the hyphen. Of course, but one reason could be assigned for this practical universality of method, so far as the earlier workers had any definite policy in this respect. The similarity resulted from the fact that so only could they record the best usage, and that what they so recorded was best not only according to practise among leading writers and printers, but also in keeping with the art of grammar. Not only have the best writers used hyphened compound words, but every grammarian who ever taught anything about them has evidently striven to lay a basis for analogical decision. Many grammar text-books merely say that some compound words are written with a hyphen and some as continuous words, and then say, "Consult the dictionary." But the dictionary is not always consistent, and one of them gives countingroom, dining room, drawing-room; taleteller, story-writer, letter writer; ropemaker, love-maker, but lace maker and others (the two-word forms not given as titles); devilfish but angel fish; these being merely a few specimens that indicate lack of system. Such differences make it impossible for any one to know in a given instance without looking in the book whether this authority uses one form or another. No one can learn all the differences as they appear in the book.

In that dictionary are backbone, breastbone, jawbone, but cheek bone, haunch bone, hip bone, thigh bone; in the Standard Dictionary each bone-name is given with a hyphen, except that backbone is given for the figurative sense. Provision is necessary (or at least more comfortable) for the use of one form for each literal name.

It is simply impossible to eliminate inconsistencies of form from the English language, even if it could be proved desirable to do so. No phase of the language is less amenable to such stricture than the question when to compound and when not to compound. As to consistency, a rule may be formulated in words used by Lindley Murray in writing about verbs: "A principle may be warrantably adopted, and carried to a precise convenient extent, without subjecting its supporters to the charge of inconsistency for not pursuing it beyond the line of use and propriety."

No principle of language can be adduced in support of a choice of form for counting-room, dining-room, or drawing-room, or for story-writer or letter-writer, or for angel-fish or devil-fish, that is not equally potent in every exactly similar instance. Various groups of similar words must have similar forms if they are to be on a basis of comfortable agreement; but no single group can ever be so absolutely differentiated that any critic could not find a point of objection, or at least of question.

A close study of English literature has been made and a system constructed in accordance with the rules of grammar, which was modified somewhat by such fully established usage as does not follow those rules. The aim is to give a full exposition of the forms used by the best writers and printers, with the additional feature of an analogical systematizing of the forms in general literary use, so far as the genius of the language will permit. Each form is based upon grammatical analogy, according to the following

General Principles

1st. That all words should be separate when used in regular grammatical relation and construction, unless they are jointly applied in some arbitrary way.

2d. That abnormal association of words generally indicates unification in sense, and hence compounding in form.

3d. That no expression in the language should ever be changed from two or more words into one (either hyphened or solid) without change of sense.

The first of these principles forbids joining an adjective and a noun in regular use (including in the classification as adjectives all words used with clear adjectival force); as, spinal column, chestnut horse, brick house, fellow citizen, he bear, man servant, brother officer, Armstrong gun.

Arbitrary application of such terms requires that they should be joined. Thus we have blue coat for the coat itself, but bluecoat for a man, and redhead is the common form of the name of a duck with a red head.

The first principle, moreover, keeps a regular adverb separate from the adjective it modifies, even when the two express one attribution; as, "highly colored wings," "recently published book."

The second principle makes two nouns used together as one name become one word, if the first is not really attributive. Thus, while brick is attributive in brick house (a house made of bricks), it is not attributive in brick-yard (a yard where bricks are made). Brick in the first instance has the same qualifying sense that bricken would have if that were used, and so is an adjective, properly standing alone; but in the second instance it has no sense other than the naming of what is made in the yard, and no quality or attribute of the yard is noted, except in the name as a whole. The second principle requires compounding:

1. When two adjectives, a noun and an adjective, or any two or more parts of speech are abnormally associated to express one attribution; as, a down-stairs room; dark-brown hair, or hair that is dark-brown;

a well-known man; knee-deep snow, or the snow is knee-deep; free-trade doctrines; a silk-and-cotton fabric; North-American birds.

2. When one of two words used together as a verb, an adverb, or any part of speech, is in such use not placed in accordance with a rule of grammar; as, to go down-town; to halter-break a horse; a cross-action; a counter-complaint; broad-mindedly; after-ages.

Rules for Selections of Forms

The legitimate conclusion from these principles is, that if one term having elements of certain kinds is properly a compound word, so is every other exactly similar term. The following categories or rules are thus obtained:

1. Every name that shows mere ellipses and inversion of a phrase containing two nouns is a compound noun.

A "box for a hat" is commonly called a hat-box; "a brush for the hair," a hair-brush; "a stove for cooking," a cooking-stove or cook-stove. It may be safely affirmed that hat-box is printed as a hyphened compound word much more frequently than it is printed as two words, and the same is true of hair-brush; so we select the compound form as fixed in the best usage. Pill-box, shoe-box, paper-box, ribbon-box, and collar-box properly have the same form as hat-box, and so on through the entire range of known or possible boxes that may be named by the word box preceded by the name of what the box is to contain. As of boxes, so of brushes, and so also of everything named in this way—every such name, except as noted below, is given as a hyphened compound word. Some names that are unquestionably compounds in their nature have never been so written, and it would be pedantic to insist that they should be. In usage, such words as company, association, asylum, are kept separate, as in railroad company, racing association, insane asylum.

Seeming Exceptions

I. Some uses in which the first of two nouns really stands as an adjective are as follows:

(1) With the sense "made of," as in silk dress, brick house, feather bed, pumpkin pie, stone wall.

(2) With the sense "having the shape or the character or quality of," as in barrel vault, alligator forceps, companion picture, he bear, man milliner, man servant, boy bishop, bull calf, brother officer, fellow citizen, mesh structure.

(3) With the sense "pertaining to, suitable for, or representing," as in parlor clock, city officer, district attorney, government employee, railroad supplies, insurance office, church furniture.

(4) With the sense "characterized by," as in diamond ring, cylinder press, cupola furnace.

(5) With the sense "situated in, having a character naturally implied from situation or connection," as in mountain streams, country gentleman, ocean steamer, school etiquette, society manners.

In specific names of this kind, however, compounding is required by the fact of specification, which is merely naming. For some common compounds other than such purely specifying names no reason is apparent, unless accent be taken as a reason; but here the indefinable border-line that exists in all human affairs seems to be encountered. Thus (a) we have sea-anemone, sea-gull, field-mouse, house-fly, mountain-fringe (a plant), etc., and, (b) while we say and write as two words o"cean steam'er, we say as one word wa'ter-an"imal, and it should be so written.

(6) With the sense "acting in support of, advocating," as in Jackson voters, silver advocates, silver man, prohibition speaker.

(7) With the sense "residing, existing, or originating in, or coming from (a place)," as in Brooklyn politics, Bath brick, New York schools, Florida oranges.

(8) With the sense "originated or made by, or named after," as in Armstrong gun, Williams College.

II. Apposition.—Placing two nouns in apposition is very nearly the same in effect as using the first as an adjective, the difference being that in a case of real apposition either word may be used alone for the thing named, as in monarch oak, knight templar, knight companion.

2. Possessive phrases used as specific names are compound words.

Literature exhibits such names of plants, etc., in different forms. Certain books have some of them compounded and others as two words; as, hare's-tail for one plant and lion's tail for another. Certain other books have the difference reversed; as, lion's-tail and hare's tail.

It is absolutely impossible to make a record of the use of these names showing differences in form that can be proved to be established. Every such name given by the dictionary is joined by a hyphen, except a few long established in continuous form, as coltsfoot, sheepshead.

3. Some words representing phrases in literal sense have become established in the solid form; as, sunbeam, daylight, hillside, loophole.

4. Some generic nouns are used, in certain classes of names, like suffixes; as, man, way, weed, wort.

Words like footman, coachman, airway, entranceway, milkweed, seaweed, and motherwort take the solid form.

Every specific name of a fish that has a monosyllabic specifying element, with fish as the generic element, is given in continuous form; as, goldfish, bluefish, hogfish. Longer names of this kind (except cuttlefish and silverfish) have the hyphen.

5. Most words used to designate something named from having as a characteristic or adjunct that which is expressed by the elements of the name are given in the solid form.

A man who wears a blue coat is called a bluecoat; a man who watches or looks out is called a lookout, and said to be "on the lookout"; a plant that looks like a golden rod is called goldenrod; a fish with a gilt head is called the gilthead; and many other things are named in this way—by making a word of the two words naming a prominent feature, likeness, characteristic, or the like. Predominance of the solid form in literature for such names is easily provable, altho they are printed in all three forms—two words, hyphened, and continuous. Exceptional use of the hyphen should be made in words that are rendered clearer by it, as mouse-ear, abscess-root.

SPECIAL EXPLANATORY NOTES

Comparison of Adjectives or Adverbs; Plurals of Nouns.

☞ Where the COMPARATIVE AND SUPERLATIVE DEGREES OF ADJECTIVES OR ADVERBS and the PLURALS OF NOUNS are not given, they are formed regularly, according to the simplest rules of grammar.

The pronunciation of plurals of nouns is indicated either by respelling or by the sign (ˢ) inserted after the plural form. EXAMPLE: du′ty, 1 diū′tı; 2 dū′ty, n. [DU′TIESˢ, pl.] The sign (ˢ) is used to indicate that the pronunciation of the plural is obtained by adding "z" to the pronunciation of the vocabulary word. Thus, DU′TIES is pronounced diū′tız.

Verbs and Their Participles, Etc.

☞ Where the TENSE AND PARTICIPIAL FORMS OF A VERB are not given, add -ed to the vocabulary word for the imperfect tense and the past participle, and -ing for the present participle, except in compound verbs. See COMPOUND WORDS, below.

The pronunciation of the participles of verbs is indicated as follows:

The sign (ᵗ) added after a verb, or after Roman I., as I^{t}. (when several parts of speech are grouped under one vocabulary entry), indicates that the pronunciation of the imperfect or past participle of this verb is obtained by adding "t" to the pronunciation of the vocabulary word. EXAMPLE: look^{t}, 1 luk; 2 lo͝ok, v. By adding "t" to the pronunciation of look, the pronunciation of looked, pp., is obtained, thus: luk + t = lukt; so blotch, 1 bloćh; 2 blŏch. I^{t}. vt., indicates that the imperfect or past participle, blotched, is pronounced bloćht.

The sign (ᵈ) added after a verb, or after Roman I., as I^{d}. (when several parts of speech are grouped under one vocabulary entry), indicates that the pronunciation of the imperfect or past participle of this verb is obtained by adding "ed" to the pronunciation of the vocabulary word. EXAMPLES: amend^{d}, 1 ə-mend′; 2 a-mĕnd′. By adding "ed" to the pronunciation of amend, the pronunciation of amended, imp. and pp., is obtained, thus: ə-mend′ + ed = ə-mend′ed; so amount, 1 ə-mount′; 2 a-mount′. I^{d}. vi., indicates that the imperfect or past participle is pronounced ə-mount′ed.

The pronunciation of the imperfect and past participle of the verbs is obtained, where no sign is given, by adding "d" to the pronunciation of the vocabulary word. EXAMPLES: love, 1 luv, 2 lŏv; loved, 1 luvd, 2 lŏvd; cable, 1 kē′bl, 2eā′bl; cabled, 1 kē′bld, 2 eā′bld.

COMPOUND WORDS are defined under their first element, except when some special reason, as of classification, requires them to be grouped under the second element.

The imperfects and participles of verbs formed by adding a prefix (if not given with the entry), as disabuse, disagree, will be found under the final element of each compound, as under abuse, agree.

Etymologies, Etc.

☞ Where the derivation of a word has been traced through more than one language in the NEW STANDARD DICTIONARY, condensation is secured in the present work by indicating the intervening language or languages by means of superior letters; the intervening languages (where more than one is noted) being given in the order which the derivation of the word has followed: thus, under the word butter, n., the expression [< Gr.$^{L+AS}$ boutyron] indicates that the word butter has come into the English language from the Greek boutyron through the medium of the Latin, and later of the Anglo-Saxon, with various modifications in the process of transition.

The abbreviations used, as, AS., F., G., Gr., L., Pg., Sans., etc., are to be found explained in their respective vocabulary places. They designate the languages from which some words are derived; as AS. = Anglo-Saxon, F. = French, G. = German, Gr. = Greek, L. = Latin, Pg. = Portuguese, Sans. = Sanskrit. Corrup. = Corruption; Ult. = Ultimately.

SUFFIXES, as -ly, -ness, following the treatment of any vocabulary word, denote that the suffix is to be added directly to the bold-face word that immediately precedes it, to form the corresponding adverb and noun. EXAMPLE: Under hate will be found hateful, a., followed by a definition of the word, and then -ly, adv., -ness, n., indicating that the adverb is hatefully and the noun hatefulness; also, hopeless, a., followed by a definition of the word, and then -ly, adv., -ness, n., indicating that the adverb is in this latter case hopelessly, and the noun hopelessness.

THE SINGLE HYPHEN (-) connects parts of a word that are arbitrarily separated, as at the end of a line, or in the division of words into syllables, the syllables which it connects being closely joined in ordinary writing or printing. The single hyphen is omitted when the primary or secondary accent is used, as in vocabulary words: as-tron′o-my for astronomy; in″di-vid′u-al for individual.

THE DOUBLE HYPHEN (=) connects only the parts of a compound word, and indicates that the parts so joined are to be connected by a hyphen in ordinary writing or printing; as, half=mast (written ordinarily half-mast).

THE SINGLE ACCENT (′) indicates the primary or chief accent; as, a′ble.

THE DOUBLE ACCENT (″) indicates the secondary accent; as, as-so″ci-a′tion; mul″ti-pli-ca′tion.

KEYS TO PRONUNCIATION

As in the NEW STANDARD DICTIONARY, two pronunciation keys are used here. The first (Key 1) is the Revised Scientific Alphabet; the second (Key 2), made by means of diacritical marks, is such as has long been in use in text-books and in the older dictionaries. For a detailed explanation of each sound given below see pages vii–xi.

The following table gives the values of the symbols in the two Keys based on the phonic values of the symbols of Key 1. For example, the sound of u in "burn," indicated in Key 1 by ŭ, is the equivalent of û in Key 2; the same sound of e, as in "fern," is indicated by ē in Key 2. The latter symbol and ī and ȳ are classed with ŭ, for in Key 2 as many as four symbols are used for the same sound—û, ē, ī, ȳ. Other symbols are classed in the same manner.

H	H	as in loch (Scotch), ach, mich (German).
ü	ü	as in Lübeck (German), Dumas (French).
n̂	n̂	as in bon (French).

The foreign sounds (H, ü, n̂) can not be represented in English spellings, but must be described in detail.

H is made with the tongue almost in position for k (as in lock). The difference is that for H the tongue does not wholly close the passage, so that the breath rushes out with great friction, making a sound like a very rough h. If the vowel preceding H is made in the front of the mouth (as German i, e, ü, ä), the H is also forward, and is then made by forcing the breath out while the tongue is held firmly in the initial position for English y.

ü represents a sound made by pronouncing ī (the vowel-sound of see), with the lips at the same time fully pursed or rounded as for whistling. It may be noted, also, that the foreign sound represented in this dictionary by the symbol ū (as French danseuse, dan"sūz') is not exactly the vowel heard in the English burn, earn, etc., but is approximately that vowel sounded while the lips are fully pursed or rounded.

n̂ is a symbol indicating that the n itself is silent, but has imparted a nasal quality to the preceding vowel.

A a	𝔄 𝔞	A a	A a
Roman.	Black Letter.	Script.	Revised Scientific.

A, a, 1 ā; 2 ă, n. [AES, A's, or As, 1 ēz; 2 ăs, pl.] The first letter in the English alphabet; also, its sound. From Phenician and old Hebrew aleph; Greek alpha; Latin A. Its Latin sound survives in arm, caim. The corresponding short vowel is rare in modern English except before r in unstressed syllables, e. g., cartoon.

The English sounds of the letter a are indicated in Key 1 by (1) ɑ as in "artistic," (2) ŏ as in "art," (3) a as in "fat," (4) ă as in "fare," (5) ɑ as in "ask," and (6) e, used to indicate an obscure sound such as is heard in the words "about, sofa," etc. The sound of a as in "ale" is indicated by ē. See E. In England a, as in "fat," is pronounced as if it were a diphthong consisting of a and ē. In the Eastern United States and in Canada the letter is given the short sharp sound in at, bat, cat, etc. For symbols used in Key 2 see the Introduction and the opposite page. The letter a is frequently silent, as when it follows e or o in bread (bred), each (ich), boat (bōt), coal (kōl). Used as a symbol, A denotes (1) Primacy in class or order, as A 1 (at Lloyd's) = first class; as a numeral, section A. (2) Mus. One of a series of tones (the 6th) in the natural diatonic scale (C), or the first note of the relative minor scale; also, a standard for tuning instruments; pitch; scale. (3) Logic. A universal affirmative proposition.

a. [Dial. or Obs.] I. v. Corrupt form of HAVE. II. pron. He; she; it; they: a corruption.

a, 1 ē; 2 ă (unaccented, 1 ə; 2 ə), indef. art. or adj. One; any; some; each; before a vowel, an. See AN; ARTICLE.

Special uses: (1) before plural nouns with few, great many, or good many; (2) with on, at, or of, denoting oneness, sameness; as, birds of a feather; (3) in such phrases as one dollar a bushel, with the distributive sense of each, and equivalent to per. [< AS. ān, one.]

a-, prefix, with values as follows: a-[1]. On; as, *a*board. [< AS. on, an.] a-[2]. Away; out (intensive or without special force); as, *a*rise; *a*wake. a-base', 1 ə-bēs'; 2 a-bās', vt. [A-BASED[t]; A-BAS'ING.] 1. To lower in position, estimation, etc.; cast down; humble. 2. To reduce in value, as coin: debase now preferred. [< L.[F] ad, to, + LL. bassus, low; see BASE, a.]

Syn.: bring low, cast down, debase, degrade, depress, discredit, disgrace, dishonor, humble, humiliate, lower, reduce, sink. Abase refers only to outward conditions. Debase applies to quality or character. The coinage is debased by excess of alloy, the man by vice. Humble in present use refers chiefly to feeling of heart; humiliate to outward conditions. To disgrace may be to bring or inflict odium upon others, but the word is chiefly and increasingly applied to deserved moral odium; he disgraced himself by his conduct. To dishonor a person is to deprive him of honor that should or might be given. To discredit one is to injure his reputation, as for veracity or solvency. A sense of unworthiness humbles; a shameful insult humiliates; imprisonment for crime disgraces. Degrade may refer to station; as, an officer is degraded by being reduced to the ranks; he is disgraced by cowardice; but degrade is now chiefly used of character; vile practises degrade; drunkenness is a degrading vice. Misfortune or injustice may abase the good; nothing but their own ill-doing can debase, degrade, or disgrace them.—Ant.: advance, aggrandize, dignify, elevate, exalt, honor, promote, raise, uplift.

a-bash', 1 ə-bąsh'; 2 a-băsh', vt. [A-BASHED[t], A-BASHT[S]; A-BASH'ING.] To deprive of self-possession; discomfit; make ashamed; confuse; embarrass. [< OF. esbahir, astonish.]

Syn.: bewilder, chagrin, confound, confuse, daunt, discompose, disconcert, dishearten, embarrass, humble, humiliate, mortify, overawe, shame. Any sense of inferiority abashes, with or without the sense of wrong. The poor are abashed at the splendor of wealth, the ignorant at the learning of the wise. To confuse is to bring into a state of mental bewilderment; to confound is to overwhelm the mental faculties; to daunt is to subject to a certain degree of fear. A solitary thinker may be confused by some difficulty in a subject; one is embarrassed in the presence of others. Confusion is of the intellect, embarrassment (as here considered) is of the feelings. A witness may be embarrassed by annoying personalities, so as to become confused in statements. To mortify a person is to bring upon him a painful sense of humiliation, whether because of his own or another's fault or failure. The parent is mortified by the child's rudeness, the child abashed at the parent's reproof. The embarrassed speaker finds it difficult to proceed. The mob is overawed by the military, the hypocrite shamed by exposure. See EMBARRASS. Compare CHAGRIN.—Ant.: animate, buoy, cheer, embolden, encourage, inspirit, rally, uphold.—Prep.: abashed at discovery; before the king; by authority; by conscious inferiority.

Syn.: anticipate, await, bear, bide, confront, continue, dwell, endure, expect, inhabit, live, lodge, remain, reside, rest, sojourn, stand, stay, stop, tarry, tolerate, wait, watch. To abide is to remain continuously without limit of time unless expressed by the context: "to-day I must abide at thy house," Luke xix, 5; "a settled place for thee to abide in forever," 1 Kings viii, 13; "Abide with me; fast falls the eventide," LYTE Hymn. Lodge, sojourn, stay, tarry, and wait, always imply a limited time; lodge, to pass the night; sojourn, to remain temporarily; live, dwell, reside, to have a permanent home; reside is a word of more dignity than live or dwell. Stop, in the sense of stay or sojourn, is colloquial, and not in approved use. Compare ENDURE; REST.—Ant.: abandon, avoid, depart, forfeit, forfend, journey, migrate, move, proceed, reject, resist, shun.—Prep.: abide in a place, for a time, with a person, by a statement.—to abide by, to stand by; accept the consequences of.—a-bid'er, n.—a-bid'ing. I. pa. Enduring; permanent. II. n. Abode; sojourn. -ly, adv.

a-bol'ish, 1 ə-bel'ish; 2 ə-bŏl'ish, vt. To do away with; put an end to; annul; destroy. [< L.[F] ab, away, + oleo, grow.] Syn.: abate, abrogate, annihilate, annul, destroy, end, eradicate, exterminate, extirpate, nullify, obliterate, overthrow, prohibit, remove, repeal, reverse, revoke, set aside, stamp out, subvert, suppress, terminate. Abolish, to do away with, bring absolutely to an end, especially as something hostile, hindering, or harmful, is now used only of institutions, customs, and conditions, especially those widespread and long existing; as, to abolish slavery, ignorance, intemperance, poverty. A building that is burned to the ground is said to be destroyed by fire. Annihilate, as a philosophical term, signifies to put absolutely out of existence. As far as our knowledge goes, matter is never annihilated, but only changes its form. Abolish is not said of laws. There we use repeal, abrogate, nullify, etc.; repeal by the enacting body, nullify by revolutionary proceedings; a later statute abrogates, without formally repealing, any earlier law with which it conflicts. An appellate court may reverse or set aside the decision of an inferior court. Overthrow may be used in either a good or a bad sense; suppress is commonly in a good, subvert always in a bad sense; as, to subvert our liberties; to suppress a rebellion. The law prohibits what may never have existed; it abolishes an existing evil. We abate a nuisance, terminate a controversy. Compare CANCEL; DEMOLISH; EXTERMINATE.—Ant.: authorize, cherish, confirm, continue, enact, establish, institute, introduce, legalize, promote, reinstate, renew, repair, restore, revive, set up, support, sustain.—a-boi'-ish-a-bl (ē²), a.—a-bol'ish-er, n.—a-bol'ish-ment, n.

a-bom′i-nate, 1 ə-bom′-ɪ-nēt; 2 a-bŏm′i-nāt, vt. [-NAT″ED[d]; -NAT″ING.] To regard with horror or loathing; abhor; hate. [< L. ab, off, + omen; see OMEN.]

a-bom″i-na′tion, 1 ə-bom″ɪ-nē′shən; 2 a-bŏm″i-nā′shon, n. 1. Strong aversion or loathing; something to be abhorred or loathed. 2. Any unpleasant fact or object, especially a cause of evil.

Syn.: abhorrence, abuse, annoyance, aversion, crime, curse, detestation, disgust, evil, execration, hatred, horror, iniquity, nuisance, offense, plague, shame, villainy, wickedness. Abomination (from the L. ab omen, a thing of ill omen) was originally applied to anything held in religious or ceremonial aversion or abhorrence; as, "That which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God." Luke xvi, 15. The word is oftener applied to the object of such aversion or abhorrence than to the state of mind that so regards it; in common use abomination signifies something very much disliked or loathed, or that deserves to be. A toad is to many an object of disgust; a foul sewer is an abomination. As applied to crimes, abomination is used of such as are especially brutal, shameful, or revolting; theft is an offense; infanticide is an abomination.—Ant.: affection, appreciation, approval, benefit, blessing, delight, desire, enjoyment, esteem, gratification, joy, satisfaction, treat. [Above.

a-bound′, 1 ə-baund′; 2 a-bound′, vi. 1. To be in abundance. 2. To be plentifully supplied (with); teem; as, the sea abounds with fish. [< L.[F] ab, from, + unda, wave.] Syn.: see FLOW. Compare AMPLE.

a-bout′, 1 ə-baut′; 2 a-bout′. I. adv. Around the outside; on every side; almost; at the point; ready; in revolution or rotation; in any direction; toward any, every, or the opposite side; moving around; astir; in activity; in winding course; hither and thither; to and fro; in effort or in scheming. II. prep. On the outside or on every side of; all around; to and fro in; over; beside; close to; somewhere near; at the point of; in connection with; engaged in; in reference to; concerning; on account of; approximating to; near. [< AS. abūtan, < an, on, + būtan, outside.] Syn.: (prep.) see AT.

a-bove′, 1 ə-buv′; 2 a-bov′. I. a. Given, said, placed, etc., a-buv′ᴱ, ∫ in what is above; preceding: a common but inelegant use. II. n. That which precedes or is just before: by ellipsis of some noun, as statement, etc. See synonyms of ABOVE, adv. & prep.

a-bove′, 1 I. adv. 1. Vertically up; overhead; higher up; on a-buv′ᴱ. ∫ the upper side. 2. Superior in rank or position. 3. In an earlier place; as, in the paragraph above. II. prep. Vertically over; on the top of; upon; in excess of; superior to; beyond; free from the reach, power, or influence of; not liable to. [< AS. ābufan, < an, on, + bufan, above.]

Syn.: (prep.) on, over, upon. Above is the most inclusive of these prepositions. It can ordinarily be substituted for on, upon, or over; as, the boards were piled one on or upon another (one above another); the hawk flies over the wood (above the wood). But it will be seen that while above is more inclusive it is less definite; the boards laid one on another are in contact, but when laid one above another, they may not touch. Over contains often an intimation, while it may be slight, of extension or motion across, while above may simply imply greater elevation. If we say, the mountain towers above the plain, we think only of its height; but if we say, the mountain towers over the plain, we think of the plain as in the shadow of the mountain and dominated by it. So we say the mountain is 7,000 feet above the sea, where it would be impossible to say 7,000 feet over the sea. Upon is practically identical with on, both in meaning and use, preference of either over the other being generally for euphonic reasons; upon in many connections is somewhat more formal or dignified than on. Above as an adjective or a noun, though employed by some good writers, is against the weight of literary authority. If the reference is to something actually to be found in the text, as a sentence, a paragraph, or a statement, it is preferable to say, for instance, "The foregoing or preceding paragraph," "The statement given above." When the reference is to something, as a material object, a fact, a circumstance, or an incident, not actually included, but only mentioned, described, or related in the text, we may say, for example, "The above-mentioned circumstance," "The person referred to above," "The incident related above," etc.—Ant.: see BENEATH.—a-bove′board″, a. & adv. In open sight; without concealment or trickery; open; openly. Syn.: see CANDID.

a-bridg′ment, 1 ə-brij′ment or -mənt; 2 a-brĭdġ′ment, n. 1. The act of abridging; the state of being abridged. 2. Something that has been abridged; an epitome or abstract. 3‖. Anything that causes time to pass quickly; a dramatic performance. a-bridge′ment‡.

Syn.: abbreviation, abstract, analysis, compend, compendium, conspectus, digest, epitome, outline, summary, synopsis. An abridgment gives the most important portions of a work substantially as they stand. An outline or synopsis is a kind of sketch closely following the plan. An abstract or digest is an independent statement of what the book contains, the abstract closely following the main heads, the digest giving the substance with careful consideration of all. An analysis draws out the chief thoughts or arguments, expressed or implied. An epitome, compend, or compendium is a condensed view of a subject, whether derived from a previous publication or not. We may have an abridgment of a dictionary, but not an analysis, abstract, digest, or summary. We may have an epitome of religion, a compendium of English literature, but not an abridgment. See ABBREVIATION.—Ant.: amplification, expansion, paraphrase. [lation.

(2) Relating to the absolute-temperature scale. 7†. Freed or absolved from. [< L.[OF] absolutus, pp. of absolvo; see ABSOLVE.]

Syn.: arbitrary, arrogant, authoritative, autocratic, coercive, commanding, compulsive, compulsory, controlling, despotic, dictatorial, dogmatic, domineering, exacting, fiat, haughty, imperative, imperious, infinite, irresponsible, lordly, overbearing, peremptory, perfect, positive, pure, supreme, tyrannical, unconditional, unequivocal. As used of human authorities, absolute signifies free from limitation by other authority and supreme exalted over all other; as, an absolute monarch, the supreme court. As absolute power in human hands is always abused, the unfavorable meaning of the word predominates. Autocratic power is absolute power self-established and self-maintained. Despotic is commonly applied to a masterful or severe use of power, which is expressed more decidedly by tyrannical. Arbitrary may be used in a good sense; as, the pronunciation of proper names is arbitrary; but the bad sense is the prevailing one; as, an arbitrary proceeding, arbitrary power. An irresponsible ruler is likely to be tyrannical. Authoritative, implying the right to claim authority, imperative, peremptory, and positive are used ordinarily in the good sense; as, an authoritative definition; an imperative demand; a peremptory command; positive instructions. Compare ARBITRARY; FLAT; IMPERIOUS; INFINITE; PERFECT.—Ant.: accountable, complaisant, compliant, conditional, constitutional, contingent, docile, ductile, gentle, humble, lenient, limited, lowly, meek, mild, responsible, submissive, yielding.

—absolute pitch (Mus.), pitch thought of without reference to relationship.—a. temperature (Physics), temperature reckoned from the absolute zero.—a. zero, that point of temperature at which a body would be wholly deprived of heat, and at which a perfect gas would exert no pressure: supposed to be about −273° C., −459° Fahr., or −219° Réaumur: used only on the thermodynamic scale.—ab'so-lute-ly, adv.—ab'so-lute-ness, n.—ab'so-lu"tism, n. 1. The doctrine or practise of unlimited authority and control; despotism; predestination. 2. Absoluteness; positiveness.—ab'so-lu"tist, n. An advocate of absolute government or of the philosophy of the Absolute.—ab"so-lu-tis'tic, a.—ab-sol'u-to-ry, a. Having power to absolve; absolving.

ab'so-lute, n. 1. [A-] The unlimited and perfect Being, God. 2. That which is perfect; perfection.

ab"so-lu'tion, 1 ab'so-lū'shən; 2 ăb'so-lū'shon, n. An absolving, or a being absolved; forgiveness. Specif.: (1) R. C. Ch. (a) The act of a priest pronouncing sin, its eternal punishment, or the canonical penalties attached to it, remitted by authority of the priestly office. (b) The act of releasing from censure without the sacrament of penance. (c) A solemn rite performed at the end of a requiem mass, over the remains of the departed. (2) Other Chs. The declaration or imploring of God's forgiveness by a priest or minister; also, the forgiveness itself.

ab-solv(e'), 1 ab-selv'; 2 ăb-sŏlv', vt. [AB-SOLV(E)D'[S]; AB-SOLV'ING.] 1. To set free, as from obligation or liability 2. To free from sin or its penalties; forgive; pardon; acquit. [< L. ab, from, + solvo, loose.]

Syn.: acquit, clear, discharge, exculpate, exempt, exonerate, forgive, free, justify, liberate, pardon, release, set free. To absolve, in the strict sense, is to set free from any bond. One may be absolved from a promise by a breach of faith on the part of one to whom the promise was made. To absolve from sins is formally to remit their condemnation and penalty, regarded as a bond upon the soul. To acquit of sin or crime is to free from the accusation of it, pronouncing one guiltless; the innocent are rightfully acquitted; the guilty may be mercifully absolved. Compare JUSTIFY: PARDON.—Ant.: accuse, bind, charge, compel, condemn, convict, impeach, inculpate, obligate, oblige.—Prep.: one is absolved from (rarely of) a promise, a sin, etc.

ab'so-nant, 1 ab'so-nənt; 2 ăb'so-nant, a. Discordant; unreasonable. [< AB- + L. sonan(t-)s; see SONANT.]

ab-sorb', 1 ab-sōrb'; 2 ăb-sôrb', vt. 1. To drink in or suck up, as through or into pores; engross completely; swallow up. 2. To take up or in by chemical or molecular action. 3. To take up entirely by purchase or use, as bonds or goods. [< L.[P] ab, from, + sorbeo, suck in.]

Syn.: consume, drink in, drink up, engross, exhaust, imbibe, suck up, swallow, swallow up, take in, take up. A fluid that is absorbed is taken up into the mass of the absorbing body, with which it may or may not permanently combine. A substance is consumed which is destructively appropriated by some other substance, being, or agency, so that it ceases to exist or to be recognized as existing in its original condition; fuel is consumed in the fire, food in the body; consume is also applied to whatever is removed from the market for individual use; as, silk and woolen goods are consumed. A great talker engrosses the conversation. A credulous person swallows the most preposterous statement. A busy student imbibes or drinks in knowledge; he is absorbed in a subject that takes his whole attention.—Ant.: cast out, disgorge, disperse, dissipate, distract, eject, emit, exude, give up, put forth, radiate, send out, shoot forth, throw off, vomit.—Prep.: plants absorb moisture from the air; the student is absorbed in thought; nutriment may be absorbed into the system through the skin.

—ab-sorb'a-bil'i-ty, n.—ab-sorb'a-bl(e), a.—ab-sorbed', pa. 1. Deeply engrossed. 2. Sucked up or sunken in. Syn.: see ABSTRACTED. — ab-sorb'ed-ly, adv. —ab-sorb'ed-ness, n.—ab-sor"be-fa'cient. I. a. Causing absorption or drying up. II. n. A substance causing or promoting absorption.—ab-sor'ben-cy, n.—ab-sor'bent. I. a. Absorbing or tending to absorb. II. n. A substance, duct, etc., that absorbs.—ab-sorb'er, n. One who or that which absorbs; specif., a part, as in a caloric engine, having the function of absorbing heat and giving it out later, or, as in an automobile spring, a device for absorbing the shock or jar when the machine is in motion.—ab-sorb'ing, a. Tending or fitted to absorb; engrossing.—ab-sorb'ing-ly, adv.—ab-sorp'tion, n. The act of absorbing; the condition of being absorbed; specif., in physics, the act of absorbing light.—ab-sorp'tiv(es, a. Capable of absorbing; absorbent.—absorptive bands and lines, the bands and lines of an absorption spectrum. See SPECTRUM.—ab-sorp'tiv(e-ness§, n. ab"sorp-tiv'i-ty‡.

abst., abstr., abbr. Abstract.

ab-stain', 1 ab-stēn'; 2 ăb-stān', vi. To keep oneself back; refrain voluntarily: with from. [< L.F abstineo, < abs, from, + teneo, hold.] Syn.: see CEASE; REFRAIN.—ab-stain'er, n. One who abstains; a teetotaler.

ab-ste'mi-ous, 1 ab-stī'mi-us; 2 ăb-stē'mi-ŭs, a. 1. Eating and drinking sparingly. 2. Characterized by or spent in abstinence; avoiding excess; self-denying; temperate. [< L. abs, from, + temetum, intoxicating drink.] Syn.: see SOBER.—ab-ste'mi-ous-ly, adv.—ab-ste'mi-ous-ness, n. Abstinence. Syn.: see ABSTINENCE.

ab-sten'tion, 1 ab-sten'shən; 2 ăb-stĕn'shon, n. A refraining or abstaining.—ab-sten'tious, a.

ab-sterge', 1 ab-stūrj'; 2 ăb-stĕrg', vt. \ [-STERGED'; -STERG'ING.] To wipe away; cleanse. [< L. abs, off, + tergeo, wipe.] ab-sterse't.—ab-ster'gent. I. a. Cleansing. II. n. A cleansing application. ab-ster'siv(es‡.—ab-ster'sion, n. The act of wiping or cleansing.—ab-ster'siv(e-ness§, n. The quality of being abstersive.—ab-ster'so-ry, a.

ab'sti-nence, 1 ab'sti-nens; 2 ăb'sti-nĕnç, n. The act or practise of abstaining; the forbearing voluntarily, especially from intoxicating drinks; self-denial. [< L.F abstinentia, < abstineo; see ABSTAIN.] ab'sti-nen-cy‡.

Syn.: absteminousness, continence, fasting, frugality, moderation, self-control, self-denial, self-restraint, sobriety, temperance. Abstinence from food commonly signifies going without; abstemiousness, partaking moderately; abstinence may be for a single occasion, abstemiousness is habitual moderation. Self-denial is giving up what one wishes; abstinence may be refraining from what one does not desire. Fasting is abstinence from food for a limited time, and generally for religious reasons. Sobriety and temperance signify maintaining a quiet, even temper by moderate indulgence in some things, complete abstinence from others. Total abstinence has come to signify the entire abstaining from intoxicating liquors.—Ant.: drunkenness, excess, gluttony, greed, intemperance, intoxication, reveling, revelry, self-indulgence, sensuality, wantonness.—Prep.: the negative side of virtue is abstinence from vice.—total abstinence, an entire refraining from the use of alcoholic drinks.—ab'sti-nent, a. Abstemious. Syn.: see SOBER.—ab'sti-nent-ly, adv.

ab-stract'd, 1 ab-strakt'; 2 ăb-străct', v. I. t. 1. To take away; remove; purloin. 2. To withdraw the attention of; divert. 3. To separate in thought (attributes, etc.). 4. To make an abstract of (a book, treatise, etc.); abridge; epitomize. 5. Chem. To extract, as by distillation. II. i. To practise abstraction; form abstractions; also, to withdraw; be apart.

Syn.: appropriate, detach, discriminate, distinguish, distract, divert, eliminate, purloin, remove, separate, steal, take away, withdraw. The central idea of withdrawing makes abstract in common speech a euphemism for appropriate (unlawfully), purloin, steal. In mental processes we discriminate between objects by distinguishing their differences; we separate some one element from all that does not necessarily belong to it, abstract it, and view it alone. The mind is abstracted when it is withdrawn from all other subjects and concentrated upon one, diverted when it is drawn away from what it would or should attend to by some other interest, distracted when the attention is divided among different subjects, so that it can not be given properly to any. The trouble with the distracted person is that he is not abstracted. Compare ABBREVIATION; ABRIDGMENT; ABSTRACTED; DISCERN.—Ant.: add, combine, complete, conjoin, fill up, increase, restore, strengthen, unite.—Prep.: the purse may be abstracted from the pocket; the substance from the accidents; a book into a compend.—ab-stract'er, ab-strac'tor, n.

ab'stract, 1 ab'strakt; 2 ăb'străct, a. 1. Considered apart from the concrete; general; theoretical; hence, difficult; ideal. 2. Imaginary; visionary; abstruse. 3. Produced by or resulting from abstraction. 4. Withdrawn from contemplation of present objects; abstracted. 5. Philos. Dissociated from closely connected perceptions or ideas; general, as opposed to particular.—abstract idea (Psychol.), the schematized mental representation of any quality, or combination of qualities, or relation.—a. noun, a noun indicating a quality.—a. number, a number considered apart from the objects enumerated.—ab'stract-ly, adv.—ab'stract-ness, n.

ab'stract, n. A summary or epitome; a generality; in law, a compendium; in logic, an abstract idea or term; in grammar, an abstract noun, as virtue, goodness, etc.; in pharmacy, a special preparation of a drug in powder. [< L. abs, from, + traho, draw.] Syn.: see ABBREVIATION; ABRIDGMENT.—abstract of title (Law), a document containing a brief and orderly statement of the original grant and subsequent conveyances and encumbrances relating to the title and ownership of real estate.—in the a., conceived apart from concrete relation or embodiment; in its general reference or meaning; abstractly.

ab-stract'ed, 1 ab-strakt'ed; 2 ăb-străct'ĕd, a. 1. Absent-minded. 2. Separated from all else; apart; abstruse.

Syn.: absent, absent-minded, absorbed, heedless, inattentive, indifferent, listless, negligent, oblivious, preoccupied, thoughtless. As regards mental action, absorbed, abstracted, and preoccupied refer to the cause, absent or absent-minded to the effect. The man absorbed in one thing will appear absent in others. A preoccupied person may seem listless and thoughtless, but the really listless and thoughtless have not mental energy to be preoccupied. The absent-minded man is oblivious of ordinary matters, because his thoughts are elsewhere. One who is preoccupied is intensely busy in thought; one may be absent-minded simply through inattention, with fitful and aimless wandering of thought. Compare ABSTRACT.—Ant.: alert, attentive, on hand, prompt, ready, thoughtful, wide-awake.

ab-strac'tion, 1 ab-strak'shən; 2 ăb-străc'shon, n. 1. State of being abstracted; an abstracting. 2. An abstract idea; something unreal or visionary. 3. Separation; removal; theft. 4. Absence of mind. 5. Seclusion of life, as by a hermit; separation from worldly objects.

ab-strac'tiv(es, 1 ab-strak'tiv; 2 ăb-străc'tiv, a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or tending to abstraction; having the power of abstraction; epitomizing. 2. Of the nature of abstraction or an abstract. -ly, adv. -ness, n.

ab-stric'tion, 1 ab-strik'shən; 2 ăb-strĭc'shon, n. Bot. A process of spore-formation in certain fungi, in which the sporophore becomes constricted by septa at the place of division. [< AB- + L. strictio(n-), < stringo, bind.]

ab-struse', 1 ab-strūs'; 2 ăb-strus', a. 1. Hard to be understood. 2†. Hidden; concealed. [< L. abs, from, + trudo, push.] Syn.: see COMPLEX; MYSTERIOUS; OBSCURE.—ab-struse'ly, adv.—ab-struse'ness, n.

ab-surd', 1 ab-sūrd'; 2 ăb-sûrd', a. Opposed to manifest truth; irrational; preposterous; ridiculous. [< L. ab- (intens.) + surdus, deaf.]

Syn.: anomalous, chimerical, erroneous, false, foolish, ill-advised, ill-considered, ill-judged, inconclusive, incorrect, infatuated, insane, irrational, ludicrous, mistaken, monstrous, nonsensical, paradoxical, preposterous, ridiculous, senseless, stupid, unreasonable, wild. That is absurd which is contrary to the first principles of reasoning; as, that a part should be greater than the whole is absurd. A paradoxical statement appears at first thought contradictory or absurd, while it may be really true. Anything is irrational when clearly contrary to sound reason, foolish when contrary to practical good sense. Silly when petty and contemptible in its folly, erroneous when containing error that vitiates the result, unreasonable when there seems a perverse bias or an intent to go wrong. Monstrous and preposterous refer to what is overwhelmingly absurd; as, "O monstrous! eleven buckram men grown out of two," SHAKESPEARE 1 King Henry IV, act ii, sc. 4. The ridiculous or the nonsensical is worthy only to be laughed at. The lunatic's claim to be a king is ridiculous; the Mother Goose rimes are nonsensical. Compare INCONGRUOUS.—Ant.: certain, consistent, demonstrable, demonstrated, established, incontestable, incontrovertible, indisputable, indubitable, infallible, logical, rational, reasonable, sagacious, sensible, sound, substantial, true, undeniable, unquestionable, wise.

—ab-surd'i-ty, n. [-TIES§, pl.] 1. The quality of being absurd. ab-surd'ness‡. 2. Something absurd.—ab-surd'ly, adv.

A"bu-kir', 1 ă"bū-kir'; 2 ă"bu-kĭr', n. Bay and village, Egypt, off which Nelson defeated the French fleet in the battle of Nile, Aug. 1, 1798. A"bou-kir'‡.

a-bu'li-a, 1 ə-bū'li-ə; 2 a-bu'li-a, n. A form of mental derangement in which the will-power is lost or impaired. [< Gr. aboulia, < a- priv. + boulē, advice.]—a-bu'lic, a.

a-bun'dance, 1 ə-bun'dəns; 2 a-bŭn'danç, n. A plentiful supply; a great quantity or number; copiousness; plenty. [OF.; see ABOUND.] Syn.: see COMFORT.

a-bun'dant, 1 ə-bun'dənt; 2 a-bŭn'dant, a. Affording a plentiful supply; abounding; ample; copious. Syn.: see AMPLE; LARGE.—a-bun'dant-ly, adv.

a-buse', 1 ə-biūz'; 2 a-bŭs', vt. [A-BUSED'; A-BUS'ING.]

a-buse'F,] 1. To use improperly or injuriously; wrong; hurt; revile; violate; formerly, to deceive. 2. To violate; ravish. [< L.F ab, from, + utor, use.] Syn.: aggrieve, damage, defame, defile, disparage, harm, ill-treat, ill-use, impose on or upon, injure, malign, maltreat, misemploy, misuse, molest, oppress, persecute, pervert, pollute, prostitute, rail at, ravish, reproach, revile, ruin, slander, victimize, vilify, violate, vituperate, wrong. Abuse covers all unreasonable or improper use or treatment by word or act. A tenant does not abuse rented property by "reasonable wear," even if that may damage the property and injure its sale; he may abuse it by needless defacement or neglect. Defame, malign, rail at, revile, slander, vilify, and vituperate are used always in a bad sense. One may be justly reproached. To impose on or to victimize one is to injure him by abusing his confidence. To persecute one is to ill-treat him for opinion's sake, commonly for religious belief; to oppress is generally for political or pecuniary motives. Misemploy, misuse, and pervert are commonly applied to objects rather than to persons. Compare POLLUTE.—Ant.: applaud, benefit, care for, cherish, conserve, consider, eulogize, extol, favor, laud, panegyrize, praise, protect, regard, respect, shield, sustain, tend, uphold, vindicate.—a-bus'er, n.

ac-ces'so-ry, 1 ak-ses'o-ri; 2 ăc-çĕs'o-ry. I. a. Aiding the principal design, or assisting subordinately the chief agent, as in the commission of a crime; contributory; supplemental; additional; as, accessory nerves. II. n. [-RIESᴱ, pl.] 1. A person or thing that aids subordinately; an adjunct; accompaniment. 2. Law. A person who, even if not present, is concerned, either before or after, in the perpetration of a felony below the crime of treason. [< L.ᴸᴸ accedo; see ACCEDE.]

Syn.: abetter or abettor, accomplice, ally, assistant, associate, attendant, coadjutor, colleague, companion, confederate, follower, helper, henchman, participator, partner, retainer. Colleague is used always in a good sense, associate and coadjutor generally so; ally, assistant, associate, attendant, companion, helper, either in a good or a bad sense; abetter, accessory, accomplice, confederate, almost always in a bad sense. In law, an abettor (the general legal spelling) is always present, either actively or constructively, at the commission of the crime; an accessory never. An accomplice is usually a principal; an accessory never. If present, tho only to stand outside and keep watch against surprize, one is an abettor, and not an accessory. At common law, an accessory implies a principal, and can not be convicted until after the conviction of the principal; the accomplice or abettor can be convicted as a principal. Accomplice and abettor have nearly the same meaning, but the former is the popular, the latter more distinctively the legal term. Compare APPENDAGE; AUXILIARY.—Ant.: adversary, antagonist, betrayer, chief, commander, enemy, foe, hinderer, instigator, leader, opponent, opposer, principal, rival.—Prep.: an accessory to the crime; before or after the fact; the accessories of a figure in a painting.

ac'ci-denceɫ, 1 ak'sı-dens; 2 ăc'çi-dĕnç, n. A small book containing the rudiments, as of grammar; hence, elements or rudiments. [Corr. of accidents, pl. of ACCIDENT.]

ac'ci-denceɫ, n. Chance; mishap; fortuity.

ac'ci-dent, 1 ak'sı-dent; 2 ăc'çi-dĕnt, n. 1. Anything that happens; an occurrence; event. Especially: (1) Anything occurring unexpectedly, undesignedly, or without known or assignable cause; a contingency. (2) Any unpleasant or unfortunate occurrence involving injury, loss, suffering, or death. 2. A casualty; mishap. 3. Any non-essential circumstance or attribute. 4. Gram. An inflection, such as of case, gender, number, etc. 5. Logic. Any feature, element, or accompaniment of an object not essential to the conception of it. 6. R. C. Ch. In the plural, the appearances of bread and wine in the eucharist. [< L. accido, happen, < ad, upon, + cado, fall.]

Syn.: adventure, calamity, casualty, chance, contingency, disaster, fortuity, hap, happening, hazard, incident, misadventure, misfortune, mishap, possibility. An accident is that which happens without any one's direct intention; a chance that which happens without any known cause. If the direct cause of a railroad accident is known, we can not call it a chance. We can speak of a game of chance, but not of a game of accident. An incident is viewed as occurring in the regular course of things; but subordinate to the main purpose, or aside from the main design. Fortune is the result of inscrutable controlling forces. Fortune and chance are nearly equivalent, but chance can be used of human effort and endeavor as fortune can not be; we say "he has a chance of success," or "there is one chance in a thousand," where we could not substitute fortune; as personified, we speak of fickle Fortune, blind Chance. Since the unintended is often the undesirable, accident tends to signify some calamity or disaster, but we may speak of a fortunate or happy accident. An adventure is that which may turn out ill, a misadventure that which does turn out ill. A slight disturbing accident is a mishap. Compare CATASTROPHE; EVENT; HAZARD.—Ant.: appointment, calculation, certainty, decree, fate, foreordination, intention, law, necessity, ordainment, ordinance, plan, preparation, provision, purpose.—Prep.: the accident of birth; an accident to the machinery.

ac''ci-den'tal, 1 ak'sı-den'tal; 2 ăc'çi-dĕn'tal, a. 1. Happening or coming by chance or without design; casual; fortuitous; taking place unexpectedly, unintentionally, or out of the usual course; as, an accidental meeting. 2. Non-essential; subordinate; incidental: said of any attribute or feature not entering into the very nature of a thing. [< LL. accidentalis, < L. acciden(t-)s; see ACCIDENT.]

ac"et-an'i-lide, } ăn'i-lĭd, -lĭd or -līd, n. Chem. An acetyl derivative of anilin ($C_6H_5NHCOCH_3$), consisting of white shining crystalline scales: used in medicine as a sedative and antipyretic. [e-tat"ed, a.

ac'e-tate, 1 as'i-tēt; 2 ăç'e-tāt, n. A salt of acetic acid.—ac'- a-cet'ic, 1 ə-set'ik or ə-sī'tik; 2 ə-çĕt'ic or ə-çī'tie, a. Pertaining to or like vinegar; sour. [< L. acetum, vinegar, < aceo, be sour.]—acetic acid, a colorless, pungent, mobile liquid (CH_3CO_2H), usually obtained by the destructive distillation of wood or by the oxidation of alcohol with ferments. Vinegar is a dilute and impure acetic acid produced by fermentation.

a-cet'i-fy, 1 ə-set'i-fai; 2 ə-cĕt'i-fy, v. [-FIED; -FY'ING.] I.

t. To convert into acid or vinegar. II. i. To become acid; change into vinegar. [< ACETUM + -FY.]—a-cet'ī-fi-ca'tion, n.—a-cet'ī-fī"er, n.

ac"e-tim'e-ter, 1 as'ī-tim'ī-tər; 2 ăç"e-tim'e-ter, n. An instrument for ascertaining the strength of acetic acid or vinegar. [< ACETUM + Gr. metron, measure.] ac"e-tom'e-ter‡.—ac"e-ti-met'ri-cal, a.—ac"e-tim'e-try, n.

ac'e-tone, 1 as'ī-tōn; 2 ăç'e-tōn, n. Chem. 1. An inflammable liquid ($(CH_3)_2CO$, with a biting taste, obtained by the destructive distillation of certain wood, acetates, and various organic compounds; dimethyl ketone. It is used in making chloroform, and as a solvent for fats, camphor, and resins. 2. Any one of the ketones. [< ACETIC.]—ac"e-to-nu'ri-a, n. Excess of acetone in the urine, e. g., in diabetes.—ac"e-to-phe'none, n. A colorless liquid (C_8H_8O), obtained by distilling calcium acetate and calcium benzoate, used as a hypnotic; hypnone; phenyl methyl ketone.

ac'e-tous, 1 as'ī-tus; 2 ăç'e-tŭs, a. Of, pertaining to, or producing acetic acid; sour. ac'e-tose‡. Syn.: SEE BITTER.

a-ce'tum, 1 ə-sī'tum; 2 ə-çē'tŭm, n. Vinegar. [L., < aceo, be sour.]

ac'e-tyl, 1 as'ī-til; 2 ăç'e-tȳl, n. Chem. The hypothetical monatomic radical (C_2H_3O) of acetic acid. [< ACET- + Gr. hylē, substance.]—ac"e-tyl-cel'lu-lose, n. Same as CELLULOSE ACETATE.—ac"e-tyl'ic, a.

a-cet'y-lene, 1 ə-set'ī-līn; 2 ə-cĕt'y-lēn, n. The most brilliant of illuminating gases (C_2H_2). It may be produced synthetically from its elements, by incomplete combustion of coal gas, and commercially from calcium carbid (CaC_2) by the action of water.

A-chæ'a, 1 ə-kī'ə; 2 ə-cē'a, n. 1. A district of N. Peloponnesus, Greece; pop., with Elis, 260,000. 2. Loosely, Greece. A-cha'ia‡ [Gr.].—A-chæ'an, a. & n. A-chai'an‡.

ach"la-myd'e-ous, 1 ak"lə-mid'ī-us; 2 ăc"la-mȳd'e-ŭs, a. Bot. Having no protecting envelop, as a flower without a perianth.

ach"ro-mat'ic, 1 ak"ro-mat'ik; 2 ăc"ro-măt'ic, a. 1. Free from color or iridescence; transmitting pure white light, as a lens. 2. Resisting the usual staining agents. 3. Mus. Unmodulated; without accidentals. [< Gr. a-, without, + chrōma, color.]—ach"ro-mat'ic, n. An achromatic lens or a telescope fitted with one.—ach"ro-mat'i-cal-ly, adv.—a-chro'ma-tism, n. The state or quality of being achromatic. a-chro'ma-tic'ī-tyǂ.—a-chro'ma-tize, vt. [-TIZED; -TIZ"ING.] To render achromatic. a-chro'ma-tiseǂ.

Achromatic Lens.

A, flint glass; B, crown glass.

a-chro'ma-tin, 1 ə-krō'mə-tin; 2 ə-crō'ma-tĭn, n. Biol. The substance in the cell-nucleus which does not readily take color from basic stains. [< A-[14] + CHROMATIN.]

a-chro'ma-tous, 1 ə-krō'mə-tus; 2 ə-crō'ma-tŭs, a. Having less than the normal color; colorless.

a-chro'mic, a. Same as ACHROMATIC.

a-cic'u-la, 1 ə-sik'yu-lə; 2 ə-cĭc'yu-la, n. [-LÆ, 1 -lī; 2 -lē, pl.] A slender needle-like process; a bristle or prickle, as on a plant or animal; a needle-shaped body, as some crystals. [L.] ac'ī-cle(ǂ.—a-cic'u-lar, a. Needle-shaped; sharp-pointed.—a-cic'u-late, -lat"ed, a.—a-cic'u-lum, n. [-LA, pl.] Helminth. One of the sharp, style-like appendages whose parts project from each division of the parapodia of certain annelids.

ac'id, 1 as'id; 2 ăç'id. I. a. 1. Sharp and biting to the taste, as vinegar; sour. 2. Pertaining to, yielding, or like an acid. 3. Acidic. II. n. 1. Any sour substance. 2. Chem. A compound of hydrogen in which all or a part of the hydrogen may be exchanged for a metal or a basic radical, forming a salt. Aqueous solutions of acids are sour, and redden vegetable substances, as litmus. They generally contain oxygen united with another element that gives the name to the acid: thus, sulfuric acid (H_2SO_4) contains hydrogen, sulfur, and oxygen. [< L. acidus, < aceo, be sour.] Syn.: see BITTER.—a-cid'ic, a. 1. Geol. Containing a high percentage of silica: said of rocks: opposed to basic. 2. Acid-forming.—ac'id-ly, adv.—ac'id-ness, n. Same as ACIDITY, 1 & 2.

a-cid'i-fy, 1 ə-sid'ī-fai; 2 ə-çĭd'ī-fȳ, v. [-FIED; -FY"ING.] I. t. To render acid; change into acid. II. i. To become acid. [< ACID + -FY.]—a-cid'i-fi"a-bl(e‡, a.—a-cid'i-fi"ant, a.—ac"i-dif'ic, a. Producing an acid or acidity; making acid.—a-cid"i-fi-ca'tion, n.—a-cid'i-fi"er, n.

ac"i-dim'e-ter, 1 as"ī-dim'ī-tər; 2 ăç"i-dim'e-ter, n. Any apparatus for determining the strength of acids. [< ACID + Gr. metron, measure.]—ac"i-met'ric, a.—ac"i-met'ri-cal, a.—ac"i-dim'e-try, n. The process of determining the strength of acids, as by the use of standard alkaline solutions.

a-cid'i-ty, 1 ə-sid'ī-tī; 2 ə-çĭd'ī-ty, n. 1. The state or quality of being acid. 2. Degree of acid strength. 3. The combining power of a base with reference to an acid. ac'id-ness‡.

ac"i-do'sis, 1 as"ī-dō'sis; 2 ăç"i-dō'sis, n. Acid intoxication of the body.

a-cid'u-late, 1 ə-sid'yu-lēt; 2 ə-çĭd'yu-lāt, vt. [-LAT'ED‡; -LAT'ING.] To make somewhat acid; figuratively, to embitter.—a-cid"u-la'tion, n.

a-cid'u-lous, 1 ə-sid'yu-lus; 2 ə-çĭd'yu-lŭs, a. Slightly acid; subacid; sour-tempered. Syn.: see BITTER.

ac'i-er-age, 1 as'ī-er-ij; 2 ăç'i-er-ăg, n. [F.] The process of electroplating a metal with iron or steel.

ac'i-er-ate, 1 as'ī-er-ēt; 2 ăç'i-er-āt, vt. [-AT'ED‡; -AT'ING.] To turn into steel. [< F. acier, steel, < LL. aciarium, < L. acies, edge.]—ac"i-er-a'tion, n.

ac'i-form, 1 as'ī-fōrm; 2 ăç'i-fôrm, a. Needle-shaped. [< L. acus, needle, + forma, shape.]

a-cin'a-ci-form, 1 ə-sin'ə-si-fōrm; 2 ə-çĭn'a-çi-fôrm, a. Bot. Similar-shaped; having one edge thick and slightly concave, the other thin and convex, so as to resemble a simitar.

a-cin'i-form, 1 ə-sin'ī-fōrm; 2 ə-çĭn'ī-fôrm, a. 1. (1) Of the shape of a cluster of grapes. (2) Composed of or full of kernels. (3) Like a grape. 2‖. Anat. Of the color of a purple grape: said of a layer of pigment in the iris.

ac'i-nose, 1 as'ī-nōs; 2 ăç'i-nōs, a. Composed of small racemose lobules or acini; consisting of minute granular concretions. ac'ī-nous‡.

ac'i-nus, 1 as'ī-nus; 2 ăç'i-nŭs, n. [-NI, 1 -nai; 2 -nī, pl.] [L.] 1. Bot. (1) One of the drupelets of an aggregate baccate fruit, as a raspberry. (2) A grape-seed. Syn.: accomplishment, achievement, action, consummation, deed, doing, effect, execution, exercise, exertion, exploit, feat, motion, movement, operation, performance, proceeding, transaction, work. Act is single, individual, momentary; action a complex of acts, or a process, state, or habit of exerting power. We say a virtuous act, but rather a virtuous course of action. Act and deed are both used for the thing done, but act refers to the power put forth, deed to the result accomplished; as, a voluntary act, a bad deed. Deed is commonly used of great, notable, and impressive acts, as are achievement, exploit, and feat. A feat exhibits strength, skill, personal power, whether mental or physical, especially the latter; as, a feat of arms, a feat of memory, Achievement is the doing of something great and noteworthy; an exploit is brilliant, but its effect may be transient; an achievement is solid, and its effect enduring. See EXERCISE; MOTION.—Ant.: cessation, deliberation, endurance, immobility, inaction, inactivity, inertia, passion (in philosophic sense), quiescence, quiet, repose, rest, suffering, suspension.

a-dapt′ᵈ, 1 ə-dapt′; 2 a-dăpt′, vt. To adjust to situation, environment, or the like; make suitable; conform; remodel. [< L. ad, to, + aptus, fit.]

Syn.: accommodate, adjust, arrange, attune, conform, fashion, fit, harmonize, prepare, proportion, set, suit. Fit and adapt refer to some antecedent shaping to secure agreement; fit applies especially to original purpose; as, the key is fitted to the lock; adapt often applies to the securing of agreement by partial change; a novel is adapted for the stage by changing its substance from the narrative to the dramatic form. Adjust refers chiefly to relative position; the parts of a typewriter, already fitted and adapted to each other, must be adjusted for perfect alinement. To suit is to make one thing or person in all respects agreeable to another. "Suit the action to the word, the word to the action." SHAKESPEARE Hamlet act iii, sc. 2. Conform implies merely external agreement, as of a glacier to a rock-surface, or of dissenters to an established church. Accommodate implies some concession or yielding to secure harmony; as, to accommodate oneself to circumstances. Arrange refers to position and order, commonly of detached objects; as, to arrange the furniture of a room, or the heads of a discourse. See ACCOMMODATE. Compare SET.

ad-dict'ed, pa. Accustomed; inclined to the pursuit, practise, or taking of anything; as, addicted to drugs or to drinking tea.

Syn.: abandoned, accustomed, attached, devoted, disposed, given, given over, given up, habituated, inclined, predisposed, prone, wedded. One is addicted to that which he has allowed to gain a strong, habitual, and enduring hold upon action, inclination, or involuntary tendency, as to a habit or indulgence. A man may be accustomed to labor, attached to his profession, devoted to his religion, given to study or to gluttony (in the bad sense, given over, or given up, is a stronger and more hopeless expression, as is abandoned). One inclined to luxury may become habituated to poverty. One is wedded to that which has become a second nature, as to science or to art. Prone is used only in a bad sense, and generally of natural tendencies; as, our hearts are prone to evil. Abandoned tells of acquired viciousness to which one has surrendered himself. Addicted may be used in a good, but more frequently a bad sense; devoted is used chiefly in the good sense; as, a mother's devoted affection. —Ant.: averse, disinclined, indisposed, unaccustomed.—Prep.: addicted to vice.

Ad'dis Ab-ba'ba, 1 ä'dis ə-bä'bə; 2 ä'dis ä-bä'bä. A town, capital of Abyssinia; pop. about 40,000. A'dis A-be'ba[†].

[< L.[F] ad, to, + directus, direct.]

Syn.: accost, apostrophize, appeal, approach, court, greet, hail, inscribe, salute, speak to, woo. To accost is to speak first to; greet is not so distinctly limited; to salute is to greet with special token of respect; to hail is to greet in a loud-voiced and commonly hearty and joyous way, as appears in the expression "hail fellow, well met." Address is slightly more formal than accost or greet, tho it may often be interchanged with them. One may address another at considerable length or in writing; he accosts orally and briefly.—Ant.: avoid, cut, elude, ignore, overlook, pass, pass by, shun.—Prep.: address the memorial to the legislature; the president addressed the people in an eloquent speech; he addressed an intruder with indignation.

—to address the ball (Golf), to get into position to strike a ball.—ad"dress-ee', n. One who is addressed.—ad-dress'er, n. 1. One who presents or signs an address or petition or a formal document. 2. Anything that addresses. ad-dress'or[†].

ad-dress', n. 1. A set or formal discourse; a speaking to or accosting; an appeal; application; petition. 2. The directing of something to some person or place; also, the name, place, residence, etc., of a person. 3. Com. Consignment, as of a vessel or cargo. 4. The manner of a person; delivery; bearing. 5. Any courteous or devoted attention; wooing: chiefly in the plural. 6. Skilful conduct or action; adroitness; tact. 7†. Dress.

Syn.: adroitness, courtesy, dexterity, discretion, ingenuity, manners, politeness, readiness, speech, tact. Address, as here considered, is a general power to direct to the matter in hand whatever qualities are most needed for it at the moment. It includes adroitness and discretion to know what to do or say and what to avoid; ingenuity to devise; readiness to speak or act; the dexterity that comes of practise; and tact, which is the power of fine touch as applied to human character and feeling. Courtesy and politeness are indispensable elements of good address. Compare SPEECH.—Ant.: awkwardness, boorishness, clownishness, clumsiness, fatuity, folly, ill breeding, ill manners, rudeness, stupidity, unmannerliness, unwisdom.—Prep.: address in dealing with opponents; the address of an accomplished intriguer; an address to the audience.

ad-her'ent, 1 ad-hɪr'ent; 2 ăd-hēr'ĕnt. I. a. 1. Clinging or sticking fast. 2. Bot. Adnate. II. n. 1. One who is devoted or attached, as to a cause or leader. 2§. An appendage. ad-her'er‡.

Syn.: aid, aider, ally, backer, disciple, follower, partizan, supporter. An adherent is one who is devoted or attached to a person, party, principle, cause, creed, or the like. Allies may differ on every point except the specific ground of union. Allies are regarded as equals; adherents and disciples are followers. The adherent depends more on his individual judgment, the disciple is more subject to command and instruction. Partizan has the narrow and odious sense of adhesion to a party, right or wrong. One may be an adherent or supporter of a party and not a partizan. Backer is a sporting and theatrical word, not in the best usage. Compare ACCESSORY.—Ant.: adversary, antagonist, betrayer, deserter, enemy, hater, opponent, renegade, traitor.—Prep.: adherents to principle; adherents of Luther.

af-fin'i-ty, 1 ə-fin'ı-tı; 2 ă-fĭn'ĭ-tĭ, n. [-TIES[2], pl.] 1. Any natural drawing or inclination; close relation or agreement; chemical attraction. 2. Biol. Structural likeness in organisms, or (Philol.) in languages, indicating a common origin. 3. Chem. The property or attraction by which differing elements or groups of elements, when brought into contact, unite to form a new compound; chemical attraction; chemism. 4. Connection through certain relations formed, as by church or state. Especially: (1) Relationship through marriage (as opposed to blood-relationship). (2) R. C. Ch. The relationship between a man and his wife's relatives and between a woman and her husband's relatives. 5. A Platonic or spiritual attraction held to exist between certain persons, especially between those of opposite sexes; also, the person exerting such attraction. [< L. affinita(t-)s, < ad, to, + finis, end.]

Syn.: alliance, analogy, birth, blood, consanguinity, descent, family, kin, kind, kindred, race, relationship. Kind is broader than kin, denoting the most general relationship, as one of the whole human species in mank*ind*, human*kind*, etc.; kin and kindred denote direct relationship that can be traced through either blood or marriage, preferably the former; either of these words may signify collectively all persons of the same blood or members of the same family, relatives or relations. Affinity is relationship by marriage, consanguinity is relationship by blood. There are no true antonyms of kin or kindred, except those made by negatives, since strangers, aliens, foreigners, and foes may still be kin or kindred. Affinity is also somewhat vaguely used of any close agreement, likeness, or attraction, as the spiritual attraction held to exist between certain persons, commonly of opposite sexes; also, of any natural inclination or tendency of mind or character toward certain subjects, activities, etc.—Ant.: see ANTIPATHY.—Prep.: for.

af-firm', 1 ə-fûrm'; 2 ă-fĭrm', v. I. t. 1. To declare or state positively; make (a statement) and maintain (it) to be true; maintain; assert; aver. 2. To confirm, establish, or ratify. II. i. 1. To maintain the affirmative. 2. To make a formal judicial declaration. [< L. ad, to, + firmus, firm.]

Syn.: assert, asseverate, aver, declare, depose, indorse, maintain, predicate, propound, protest, state, swear, tell, testify. Affirm has less of egotism than assert, more solemnity than declare, and more composure and dignity than asseverate, which is to assert excitedly. In legal usage, affirm differs from swear in not invoking the name of God. See ALLEGE; ASSERT; STATE.—Ant.: contradict, deny, dispute, gainsay, negative, oppose, refute.

—af-firm'a-bl(e^P), a.—af-firm'a-bly, adv.—af-firm'ance, n. 1. Affirmation. 2. Law. Ratification; confirmation.—af-firm'ant, 1. a. Declaring; affirming. II. n. An affirmer; in law, one who testifies under affirmation instead of formal oath.

Syn.: accede, accept, accord, acquiesce, admit, approve, assent, coincide, combine, comply, concur, consent, harmonize. Agree is the most general term of this group; to concur is to agree in general; to coincide is to agree in every particular. Concur tends to expression in action more than coincide; we may either concur or coincide, in an opinion, but concur in a decision; views coincide, causes concur. One accepts another's terms, complies with his wishes, admits his statement, approves his plan, conforms to his views of doctrine or duty, accedes or consents to his proposal. Accede expresses the more formal agreement, consent the more complete. One may silently acquiesce in that which does not meet his views, but which he does not care to contest. See ASSENT.—Ant.: contend, contradict, decline, demur, deny, differ, disagree, dispute, dissent, oppose, protest, refuse.—Prep.: I agree in opinion with the speaker; to the terms proposed; persons agree on or upon a statement of principles, rules, etc.; we must agree among ourselves; the climate agrees with us.

Syn.: abet, assist, befriend, cooperate, encourage, foster, help, second, serve, stand by, succor, support, sustain, uphold. Help expresses greater dependence and deeper need than aid. In extremity we say "God help me!" rather than "God aid me!" In time of danger we cry "help! help!" rather than "aid! aid!" To aid is to second another's own exertions. We can speak of helping the helpless, but not of aiding them. Help includes aid, but aid may fall short of the meaning of help. In law to aid or abet makes one a principal. (Compare synonyms for ACCESSORY.) To cooperate or collaborate implies complete or approximate equality, collaborate being used chiefly of literary or scientific work; to assist implies a subordinate and secondary relation. One assists a fallen friend to rise; he cooperates with him in helping others. We encourage the timid or despondent, succor the endangered, support the weak, uphold those who else might be shaken or cast down. Syn.: aspiration, design, determination, direction, end, endeavor, goal, inclination, intent, intention, mark, object, purpose, reason, tendency. The aim is the direction in which one shoots, or sometimes that which is aimed at. The mark is that at which one shoots; the goal, that toward which one runs. All alike indicate the direction of endeavor. The end is the point at which one expects or hopes to close his labors; the object, that which he would grasp as the reward of his labors. Aspiration, design, endeavor, purpose, referring to the mental acts by which the aim is attained, are often used as interchangeable with aim. One whose aims are worthy, whose aspirations are high, whose designs are wise, and whose purposes are stedfast, may hope to reach the goal of his ambition, and will surely win some object worthy of a life's endeavor. air[2], n. 1. Peculiar or characteristic appearance; mien; manner. 2. Assumed manner; affectation: in the plural; as, to put on airs. [< Gr.$^{L+F}$ aër, atmosphere.]

Syn.: appearance, bearing, behavior, carriage, demeanor, expression, fashion, look, manner, mien, port, pretense, sort, style, way. Air is that combination of qualities which makes the entire impression we receive in a person's presence; as, we say he has the air of a scholar, or the air of a villain. Appearance refers more to the dress and other externals. Expression and look especially refer to the face. Expression is often used applied to that which is habitual; as, he has a pleasant expression of countenance; look may be momentary; as, a look of dismay passed over his face. We may, however, speak of the look or looks as indicating all that we look at; as, he had the look of an adventurer; I did not like his looks. Bearing is rather a lofty word indicating often the expression of feeling or state of mind through bodily pose; as, he has a noble bearing; port is practically identical in meaning with bearing, but is more exclusively a literary word. Carriage, the manner of holding the body, as in walking, is more completely physical than bearing. Mien is closely synonymous with air, but less often used in a bad sense. Mien may be used to express some prevailing feeling; as, "an indignant mien." Compare BEHAVIOR; PRETENSE.

a'lien, a. 1. Of another country; foreign. 2. Hence, of foreign character; not similar; unsympathetic. [< L.OF alienus, < alius, other.]

Syn.: conflicting, contradictory, contrary, contrasted, distant, foreign, hostile, impertinent, inappropriate, irrelevant, opposed, remote, strange, unconnected, unlike. Foreign refers to difference of birth, alien to difference of allegiance. In their figurative use, that is foreign which is remote, unlike, or unconnected; that is alien which is conflicting, hostile, or opposed. Impertinent (not pertinent) and irrelevant matters can not claim consideration in a certain connection; inappropriate matters could not properly be considered. Compare ALIEN, n.—Ant.: akin, appropriate, apropos, essential, germane, pertinent, proper, relevant.—Prep.: to or from: to preferable.

a'lien, n. 1. An unnaturalized foreign resident. 2. One of another race. 3. One estranged or excluded.

Syn.: foreigner, stranger. A naturalized citizen is not an alien, even if a foreigner by birth, and perhaps a stranger in the place where he resides. A person of foreign birth not naturalized is an alien, tho he may have been long resident in the country, and ceased to be a stranger. He is an alien in one country if his allegiance is to another. The people of any country still residing in their own land are, strictly speaking, foreigners to the people of all other countries, rather than aliens; but alien and foreigner are often used synonymously.—Ant.: citizen, countryman, fellow countryman, native, native-born inhabitant, naturalized person.—Prep.: to (rarely from).

a-like', 1 ə-laik'; 2 a-līk'. I. a. Having resemblance; like one another; resembling, wholly or in part. II. adv. In like manner. [< AS. onlīc.]

Syn.: akin, analogous, equal, equivalent, homogeneous, identical, kindred, like, resembling, similar, synonymous, uniform. Two or more objects are alike when each resembles the other or others; by modifiers alike may be made to express more or less resemblance; as, these houses are somewhat (that is, partially) alike; or, exactly (that is, in all respects) alike; or, alike in color or structure. Substances are homogeneous which are made up of elements of the same kind, or which are the same in structure. To say "this is the identical man" is to say not merely that he is similar to the one I have in mind, but that he is the very same person. Things are analogous when they are similar in idea, plan, use, or character, but perhaps quite unlike in appearance; as, the gills of fishes are said to be analogous to the lungs in terrestrial animals. Compare IDENTICAL.—Ant.: different, dissimilar, distinct, heterogeneous, unlike.—Prep.: the specimens are alike in kind; they are all alike to me.

a-live', 1 ə-laiv'; 2 a-līv', a. 1. In a living state, or a state in which the organs perform their functions; having life: said of organisms: opposed to dead; as, the tree is alive even in winter. 2. In action, motion, or existence; in force or operation; in full vigor. 3. In lively action; in an animated state; sprightly; as, alive with enthusiasm. 4. In a condition of attentiveness, sensitiveness, or susceptibility; open to impressions; as, alive to pain. 5. Abounding in life or living things, or in evidences of life; as, the hive was alive with bees. [< AS. on, in, + līf, life.]

Syn.: active, alert, animate, animated, breathing, brisk, existent, existing, live, lively, living, quick, subsisting, vivacious. Alive applies to all degrees of life, from that which shows one to be barely existing or existent as a living thing, as when we say he is "barely alive," to that which implies the very utmost of vitality and power, as in the words "he is all alive," "thoroughly alive." So the word quick, which began by signifying "having life," is now mostly applied to energy of life as shown in swiftness of action. Breathing is capable of like contrast. We say of a dying man, "he is still breathing"; or we speak of a breathing statue, or "breathing and sounding, beauteous battle," TENNYSON Princess can. v, l. 155, where it means having, or seeming to have, full and vigorous breath, abundant life. al-lay', 1 a-lē'; 2 ă-lā', vt. [AL-LAYED'; AL-LAY'ING.] 1. To calm the violence or reduce the intensity of; relieve; soothe. 2. To lay to rest; pacify; calm. 3†. To lay aside; put down; overthrow; annul. [< A-[3] + AS. lecgan, lay.]

Syn.: abate, alleviate, appease, assuage, calm, compose, lessen, lighten, mitigate, moderate, mollify, pacify, palliate, quiet, reduce, relieve, soften, soothe, still, tranquilize. To allay is to lay to rest, quiet, or soothe that which is excited. To alleviate is to lighten a burden. We allay suffering by using means to soothe and tranquilize the sufferer; we alleviate suffering by doing something toward removal of the cause, so that there is less to suffer; we allay rage or panic; we alleviate poverty, but do not allay it. Pacify, directly from the Latin, and appease, from the Latin through the French, signify to bring to peace; to mollify is to soften; to mitigate is to make mild; we mollify a harsh disposition or temper, mitigate rage or pain. To calm, quiet, or tranquilize is to make still; compose, to adjust to a calm and settled condition; to soothe (originally to assent to, humor) is to bring to pleased quietude. We allay excitement, appease a tumult, calm agitation, compose our feelings or countenance, pacify the quarrelsome, quiet the boisterous or clamorous, soothe grief or distress. Compare ALLEVIATE.—Ant.: agitate, arouse, excite, fan, kindle, provoke, rouse, stir, stir up.—al-lay'er, n.

al'le-cret, 1 al'ə-kret; 2 ăl'e-crĕt, n. A breastplate with tassets, worn by light cavalry and infantry about the 16th century. See illus. in next column. [< OF. hallecret.] hal'e-cret‡.

al-lege', 1a-lej'; 2 ă-lĕĝ', vt. [AL-LEGED'; AL-LEG'ING.] 1. To assert to be true, but without proving. 2. To bring forward as a ground, or material fact, in support of or in opposition to a claim, demand, or accusation. 3. To cite or quote. [< L.[OF] ex, out, + litigo, litigate.]

Syn.: adduce, advance, affirm, assert, asseverate, assign, aver, cite, claim, declare, introduce, maintain, offer, plead, produce, say, state. To allege is formally to state as true or capable of proof, but without proving. Adduce is a secondary word: nothing can be adduced in evidence till something has been stated or alleged, which the evidence is to sustain. An alleged fact stands open to question or doubt. Alleged is, however, respectful; to speak of a "so-called" will or deed, etc., would be to cast discredit upon the document; alleged simply concedes nothing and leaves the question open. When an alleged criminal is brought to trial, the counsel on either side are accustomed to advance a theory, and adduce the strongest possible evidence in its support; they will produce documents and witnesses, cite precedents, assign reasons, introduce suggestions, offer pleas. The accused will usually assert his innocence. Compare STATE.—Ant.: see AFFIRM.—al"le-ga'tion, n. The act of alleging or asserting formally, or that which is alleged.—al-lege'a-bl(e², a. That may be alleged.—al-leg'er, n.

Al'le-gha"ny, 1 al'ə-gē"nı; 2 ăl'e-ĝă"ny, n. 1. A mountain range extending from Pennsylvania to North Carolina. 2. A river in W. New York and Pennsylvania. Al'le-ghen"y‡.—Al'le-gha"ny, a. Of or relating to the Alleghany Mountains. Al'le-ghen"y‡.

al-le'giance, 1 a-lī'jens; 2 ă-lē'ĝans, n. 1. Fidelity, or an obligation of fidelity, to a government, a superior, or a principle. 2. The obligation of fidelity in general. [< MÉ. ligeaunce, < LIEGE.]

Syn.: devotion, faithfulness, fealty, fidelity, homage, loyalty, obedience, subjection. The feudal uses of these words have mostly passed away with the state of society that gave them birth; but their origin still colors their present meaning. A patriotic American feels an enthusiastic loyalty to the republic; he takes, on occasion, an oath of allegiance to the government, but his loyalty will lead him to do more than mere allegiance could demand; he pays homage to God alone, as the only king and lord, or to those principles of right that are spiritually supreme; he acknowledges the duty of obedience to all rightful authority; he resents the idea of subjection. Fealty is becoming somewhat rare, except in elevated or poetic style, faithfulness or fidelity being now preferred.—Ant.: disaffection, disloyalty, rebellion, sedition, treason.—Prep.: allegiance of the citizen to the government; the government has a right to allegiance from the citizen.—al-le'giant, a. Loyal; faithful.

al"le-gor'ic, }1 al"ə-ger'ık, -ı-kel; 2 ăl"e-ĝŏr-ic, -i-cal, al'le-go"ry, 1 al'ə-go"rı; 2 ăl'e-ĝo"ry, n. [-RIES[2], pl.] 1. The setting forth of a subject under the guise of some other subject; an extended simile with the comparative words left out, as a story to illustrate a truth; loosely, any symbolic representation in literature or art; an emblem. 2. An example of such utterance or discourse. [< Gr.[LAT] allegoria, < allos, other, + agoreuō, harangue.]

Syn.: fable, fiction, illustration, metaphor, parable, simile, story. The allegory, parable, or fable tells its story as if true, leaving the reader or hearer to discover its fictitious character and learn its lesson. The word fiction is now applied almost exclusively to novels or romances. An allegory or parable is a moral or religious tale, of which the moral lesson is the substance, and all descriptions and incidents but accessories, as in The Pilgrim's Progress; the parable is generally briefer and less adorned than the allegory. A fable is generally brief, representing animals as the speakers and actors, and conveying some lesson of practical wisdom or shrewdness. Compare SIMILE; STORY.—Ant.: chronicle, fact, history, narrative, record.

Syn.: affinity, coalition, compact, confederacy, confederation, federation, fusion, kin, league, partnership, union. Alliance is in its common use a connection formed by treaty between sovereign states as for mutual aid in war. Partnership is a mercantile word; alliance chiefly political or matrimonial. Coalition is oftenest used of political parties; fusion is now the more common word in this sense. In a confederacy or confederation there is an attempt to unite separate states in a general government without surrender of sovereignty. Union makes the separate states substantially one. Federation is a poetic and rhetorical word expressing something of the same thought. The United States is not a confederacy nor an alliance; the nation might be called a federation, but prefers to be styled a federal union. See ASSOCIATION.—Ant.: antagonism, discord, disunion, divorce, enmity, hostility, schism, secession, separation, war.—Prep.: alliance with a neighboring people; against the common enemy; for offense and defense; alliance of, between, or among nations.

al-lot', 1 a-let'; 2 ă-lŏt', vt. [AL-LOT'TED[d]; AL-LOT'TING.] 1. To assign by lot; distribute. 2. To apportion; appoint; assign. [< F. allotir, < LL. lottum, lot.]

Syn.: appoint, apportion, assign, award, destine, distribute, divide, give, grant, mete out, portion out, select, set apart. Allot, originally to assign by lot, applies to the giving of a definite thing to a certain person. A portion or extent of time or space is allotted; as, I expect to live out my allotted time; to allot a plot of ground for a park. Appoint may be used of time, space, or person; as, the appointed day; the appointed place; an officer was appointed to this station. Destine fixes or assumes to fix what is considerably in the future; as, he destines his son to follow his own profession. Assign is rarely used of time, but rather of places, persons, or things. That which is allotted, appointed, or assigned is more or less arbitrary; that which is awarded is the due requital of something the receiver has done, and he has right and claim to it; as, the medal was awarded for valor.—Ant.: appropriate, confiscate, deny, refuse, resume, retain, seize, withhold.—Prep.: allot to a company for a purpose.—al-lot'ment, n. The act of allotting or that which is allotted; a plot of land; also, destiny.

al-lot'ro-pism, 1 a-let'ro-pizm; 2 ă-lŏt'ro-pĭsm, n. The property, process, or principle of allotropy; allotropy.

al-lot'ro-py, 1 a-let'ro-pi; 2 ă-lŏt'ro-py, n. Chem. The variation in properties shown by elements or their compounds without change of chemical composition, as carbon, which exists as diamond, graphite, and charcoal. [< Gr. allotropia, < allos, other, + tropos, < trepō, turn.]—al'lo-trope, n.

One of the forms assumed by an allotropic substance; as, the diamond is an allotrope of carbon.—al"lo-trop'ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or having the property of allotropy; as, ozone is an allotropic form of oxygen. al"lo-trop'i-cal-ly, adv.—al"lo-trop'i-cal-i-ty, n.

al-low', 1 a-lau'; 2 ă-low', v. I. t. 1. To put no obstacle in the way of; permit; tolerate; also, to approve; sanction. 2. To grant; allot; give. 3. To make allowance for; deduct. 4. To admit; acknowledge. II. i. To make allowance, concession, or abatement. [Allow derives its meanings from both Latin allaudare, to praise, and allocare, to place, stow.]

Syn.: admit, concede, confess, consent to, endure, grant, let, permit, sanction, suffer, tolerate, yield. We allow that which we do not attempt to hinder; we permit that to which we give express authorization. When this is given verbally it is called permission; when in writing it is commonly called a permit. Locally [U. S.], allow is used in the sense of think, believe, intend; as, "He allowed he would go"; "He allowed to pay it." It is used also in the sense of say. Such uses are inadmissible. We concede a right; grant a request; consent to a sale of property; permit an inspection of accounts; sanction a marriage; tolerate the rudeness of a well-meaning servant; submit to a surgical operation; yield to a demand or necessity against our wish or will, or yield something under compulsion. Suffer, in the sense of mild concession, is now becoming rare. Compare PERMISSION.—Ant.: deny, disallow, disapprove, forbid, protest, refuse, reject, resist, withstand. See also synonyms for PROHIBIT.

—Prep.: to allow of (in best recent usage, simply to allow) such an action; allow one in such a course; allow for spending-money; allow for errors.

—al-low'a-bl(e), a. That may be allowed; permissible; admissible.–al-low'a-bly, adv.–al-low'ance. I. vt. [-ANCED; -ANC-ING.] To put on an allowance; limit in amount. II. n. 1. That which is allowed; a limited amount or portion, as of income or food. 2. Concession; a difference allowed in excess or abatement. 3. Acknowledgment. Syn.: see PERMISSION; SALARY; SUBSIDY.—al-lowed', pa. That is permitted; approved; licensed.—al-low'ed-ly, adv. [birthplace of Robert Burns.

Al'lo-way, 1 al'ō-wē; 2 ăl'o-wā, n. A hamlet near Ayr, Scotland;

al-loy', 1 a-loi'; 2 ă-lŏy'. I. vt. & vi. 1. To mix with an alloy; reduce the purity of, or otherwise modify, by admixture; hence, to modify; temper; debase; impair. 2. To form into an alloy; combine by mixing. 3. To form alloy. II. n. 1. A mixture, solid solution, or combination of two or more metals; as, brass is an alloy of copper and zinc; by extension, a substance obtained by the mixture or combination of a metal and a nonmetal. 2. A baser metal mixed or combined with a finer one. 3. Anything that reduces purity. [< L. ad, to, + ligo, bind.]

Syn.: admixture, adulteration, debasement, deterioration Adulteration, debasement, and deterioration are always used in the bad sense; admixture is neutral, and may be good or bad; alloy is commonly good in the literal sense, as for giving hardness to coin, etc. An excess of alloy virtually amounts to adulteration; but adulteration is now mostly restricted to articles used for food, drink, medicine, and kindred uses In the figurative sense, as applied to character, etc., alloy is unfavorable, because there the only standard is perfection.

—al-loy'age, n. The act or process of alloying.

all'-round", 1 ôl'-round"; 2 ąl'-round", a. 1. Of comprehensive range or scope; complete in action or effect. 2. Excelling in all or many departments of the same business; many-sided; versatile.

al-lude', 1 a-liūd'; 2 ă-lūd', vi. [AL-LUD'ED[d]; AL-LUD'ING.] To refer (to something) without express mention; make indirect reference: always with to. [< L. ad, at, to, + ludo, play.]

Syn.: advert, hint, imply, indicate, insinuate, intimate, mention, point, refer, signify, suggest. Allude is erroneously used in the general sense of mention or speak of. We allude to a matter slightly, as if in byplay; we advert to it when we turn from our path to treat it; we refer to it by any clear utterance or expression. One may hint at a thing in a friendly way, but what is insinuated is always unfavorable, generally both hostile and cowardly. One may indicate his wishes, intimate his plans, imply his opinion, signify his will, suggest a course of action. Compare SUGGESTION.—Prep.: to.

al-lure', 1 a-liūr'; 2 ă-lūr', v. [AL-LURED'; AL-LUR'ING.] I. t. To draw with or as with a lure; attract; entice; tempt. II. i. To exercise attraction. [< OF. alurer, < a, to, + lurer, lure.]

Syn.: attract, cajole, captivate, coax, decoy, draw, entice, inveigle, lure, seduce, tempt, win. One may attract without intent. One may allure to evil, but ordinarily to good: "Allured to brighter worlds," GOLDSMITH Des. Vil. l. 170. Lure is rather more akin to the physical nature and commonly used in an unfavorable sense. To tempt is to endeavor to lead one wrong; to seduce is to succeed in winning one from good to ill. Win may be used in a good sense, in which it surpasses the highest sense of allure, because it succeeds in that which allure attempts. Coax expresses the attraction of the person, not of the thing. A man may be coaxed to that which is by no means alluring. Cajole and decoy carry the idea of deceiving and ensnaring. To inveigle is to lead one blindly, as into folly or wrong. See DRAW; PERSUADE.—Ant.: chill, damp, deter, dissuade, drive away, repel, warn.—Prep.: allure by hopes; allure from evil to good.

—al-lure', n. The act of alluring, or that which allures. —al-lure'ment, n. 1. Enticement; fascination; attraction. 2. A charm; lure.—al-lur'er, n.—al-lur'ing, pa. That draws as with a lure; attractive; fascinating. -ly, adv. -ness, n.

a-mass′t, 1 ə-mas′; 2 a-mȧs′, vt. To heap up; accumulate. [< F. à, to, + masser, < masse, mass.]

Syn.: accumulate, aggregate, collect, gather, heap up, hoard up, pile up, store up. To amass is to bring together materials that make a mass, a great bulk or quantity, accumulate being commonly applied to the more gradual, amass to the more rapid gathering of money or materials. We say interest is accumulated (or accumulates) rather than is amassed; a fortune may be rapidly amassed by shrewd speculations. Goods may be stored up for safe keeping or for sale, for a longer or shorter time; but to hoard is always with a view of permanent retention, generally selfish. Aggregate is now most commonly used of numbers and amounts; as, the expenses will aggregate a round million. Compare AGGREGATE, n.—Ant.: disperse, dissipate, divide, parcel, portion, scatter, spend, squander, waste.—a-mass′a-bl(e)‖, a.—a-mass′er, n.—a-mass′-ment, n. An accumulation; heap.

a-mate′‖, 1 ə-mēt′; 2 a-māt′, vt. To dismay; dishearten. [< OF. amatir, < a-, A-⁵; and see CHECKMATE.]

am″a-teur′, 1 am″ə-tûr′; 2 ăm″ə-tûr′. I. a. Pertaining to, like, or done by an amateur. II. n. 1. One who practises an art, not professionally, but for the love of it. 2. Sport. An athlete who has not engaged in contests open to professional athletes, or used any athletic art as a livelihood. [< L.ᶠ amator, lover, < amo, love.]

Syn.: connoisseur, critic, dilettante, novice, tyro. Etymologically, the amateur is one who loves, the connoisseur one who knows. The amateur practises to some extent that in regard to which he may not be well informed; the connoisseur is well informed in regard to that which he may not practise at all. A novice or tyro may be a professional; an amateur never is; the amateur may be skilled and experienced as the novice or tyro never is. Dilettante, which had originally the sense of amateur, has come to denote one who is superficial, pretentious, and affected, whether in theory or practise.—am″a-teur′ish, a. Feeble; crude; faulty as artwork.—am″a-teur′ish-ly, adv.—am″a-teur′ish-ness, n.—am″a-teur′ism, n.

a-maze′, 1 ə-mēz′; 2 a-māz′, vt. [A-MAZED′; A-MAZ′ING.] 1. To confound or bewilder; astonish greatly: with at, or, less frequently, by or with. 2†. To puzzle; bewilder; daze. [< A-³ + MAZE.]—a-mazed′, pa.—a-maz′ed-ly, adv.—a-maz′ed-ness, n.—a-maz′ing, pa. Causing amazement; astonishing; wonderful. Syn.: see EXTRAORDINARY.—a-maz′ing-ly, adv.

a-maze′ment, 1 ə-mēz′ment or -ment; 2 a-māz′ment, n. 1. Wonder; surprise; astonishment. 2†. Stupefaction; frenzy; dementia. a-maze′t [Archaic or Poet.].

Syn.: admiration, astonishment, awe, bewilderment, confusion, consternation, perplexity, surprize, wonder. Amazement and astonishment both express the momentary overwhelming of the mind by that which is beyond expectation. Awe is the yielding of the mind to something supremely grand in character or formidable in power, and ranges from apprehension or dread to reverent worship. Surprize lies midway between astonishment and amazement, and usually respects slighter matters. Consternation adds terror to astonishment or amazement. Wonder is often pleasing, and may be continuous in view of that which surpasses our comprehension; as, the magnitude, order, and beauty of the heavens fill us with increasing wonder. Compare PERPLEXITY.—Ant.: anticipation, calmness, composure, coolness, expectation, indifference, preparation, self-possession, steadiness, stoicism.—Prep.: at.

Am′a-zon¹, 1 am′ə-zen; 2 ăm′a-zŏn, n. 1. Gr. Myth. One of a race of female warriors, said by Herodotus to have existed in Scythia. 2. [A- or a-] A virago; also, any female warrior. [< Gr.ᴸ Amazōn; said by the Gr. to be from ἀ priv. + mazos, breast, from the fable that their right breasts were cut off so that they should not interfere with the use of the bow.]—Amazon stone (Mineral.), a green variety of microcline feldspar.—Am″a-zo′ni-an. I. a. 1. Pertaining to the Amazons; warlike; masculine; bold. 2. Pertaining to the Amazon river. II. n. An Amazon.

am-bi′tion, n. 1. Eager or inordinate desire of power or distinction for its own sake. 2. Worthy eagerness to achieve something great and good. 3. An object of ambitious effort. 4. Rom. Antiq. A canvassing for an office or the like. [< L. ambitio(n-), < ambio, go about (i. e. to solicit votes).]

Syn.: aspiration, competition, emulation, opposition, rivalry. Aspiration is the desire for excellence, pure and simple. Ambition, literally a going around to solicit votes, has primary reference to the award or approval of others, and is the eager desire of power, fame, or something deemed great and eminent. But there is a noble and wise or an ignoble, selfish, and harmful ambition. Emulation is not so much to win any excellence or success for itself as to equal or surpass other persons. There is such a thing as a noble emulation, but at the highest, emulation is inferior as a motive to aspiration, which seeks the high quality or character for its own sake, not with reference to another. Compare EMULATION.—Ant.: carelessness, contentment, humility, indifference, satisfaction.—am-bi'tious, 1 am-bish'us; 2 ăm-bish'ŭs, a. 1. Actuated or characterized by ambition; aspiring; alert; energetic: used with of, formerly with for or after. 2. Pretentious; showy. -ly, adv. -ness, n.

an, 1 an; 2 ăn, indef. art. or a. One, or any, when not emphatic: used like the article a, but before words beginning with a vowel sound; as, an acorn; an honest man. The n of Early English an began to drop about 1150. The rule for dropping is given by More (1532) and has been repeated ever since, but not always followed. In the Bible (1611) and Shakespeare (1623) a is regular, as now, before all consonant sounds, including h and u, eu pronounced yu. In a few instances an is found in both books. In Shakespeare an universe occurs once, a usurer five times; an hair once, a hair often; such an one occurs twice, a one always elsewhere. The form an is not used before u, eu, in Milton, Cowper, or the Revised Version, but it occurs in Pope and in other writers, even to our time. Many writers use an before an unaspirated h. In the United States a hotel is common, but in Great Britain an hotel is usually heard. [< AS. an, one.]

an'i-line, } (C_6H_7N), the base from which many of the coal-tar dyes are made. It may be regarded as derived from ammonia (NH_3) by replacing one molecule of hydrogen with the radical phenyl (C_6H_5), and is hence considered chemically as phenylamin ($C_6H_5NH_2$). Anilin was originally obtained in the distillation of indigo, but is now chiefly made from nitrobenzene. [< ANIL.]

an"i-mad-ver'sion, 1 an"ɪ-mad-vūr'shən; 2 ăn"ĭ-măd-vẽr'shon, n. 1. Criticism or censure; a censorious comment or reflection. 2‖. The act of taking judicial observation or notice of an offense; a penal visitation. 3‖. The faculty of observing; notice; monition; warning.

Syn.: aspersion, blame, censure, check, chiding, comment, criticism, disapproval, rebuke, reflection, reprehension, reproof, stricture. Blame, censure, and disapproval may either be felt or uttered; comment, criticism, rebuke, reflection, reprehension, and reproof are always expressed. Comment and criticism may be favorable as well as censorious; they imply no superiority or authority on the part of him who utters them; nor do reflection or reprehension, which are simply turning the mind back upon what is disapproved. Reprehension is supposed to be calm and just, and with good intent; it is therefore a serious matter, however mild, and is capable of great force, as expressed in the phrase severe reprehension. Reflection is often from mere ill feeling, and is likely to be more personal and less impartial than reprehension; we often speak of unkind or unjust reflections. Rebuke, literally a stopping of the mouth, is administered to a forward or hasty person; reproof is administered to one intentionally or deliberately wrong; both words imply authority in the reprover.—Ant.: approbation, approval, commendation, encomium, eulogy, panegyric, praise.—Prep.: on or upon.—an"i-mad-ver'siv(e§, a. Attentive; perceptive.—an"i-mad-ver'siv(e-ness§, n. The characteristic quality or power of animadversion.

an'i-mal, 1 an'ɪ-məl; 2 ăn'ĭ-məl. I. a. 1. Pertaining to or derived from an animal or animals. 2. Pertaining to the sentiment or bodily life of man. II. n. 1. A sentient living organism other than a plant. 2. A sentient creature inferior to man; a brute. 3. A debased and sensual human being. 4. pl. [Colloq.] Domestic quadrupeds. [L., < anima, breath.]

Syn.: (noun) beast, brute, living creature, living organism, sentient being, fauna. An animal is a sentient being, distinct from inanimate matter and from vegetable life on the one side and from mental and spiritual existence on the other. Thus man is properly classified as an animal. But to call any individual man an animal is to imply that the animal nature has undue supremacy. The brute is the animal viewed as dull to all finer feeling; the beast is looked upon as a being of appetites. We speak of the cruel father as a brute to his children; of the drunkard as making a beast of himself. Creature is a word of wide signification, including inanimate objects, plants, animals, angels, or men as divinely created. The animals of a region are collectively called its fauna. For adjective, see BRUTISH.—Ant.: angel, inanimate object, man, matter, mind, mineral, soul, spirit, substance (material), vegetable.

an-tic″i-pa′tion, n. 1. The act of anticipating, in any sense; especially, a foreseeing or foretaste; expectation. 2. An instinctive prevision. 3. Mus. The introduction of a note before its expected place in the harmony.

Syn.: antepast, apprehension, expectancy, expectation, foreboding, forecast, foresight, foretaste, forethought, hope, presentiment, prevision. Expectation may be either of good or evil; presentiment almost always, apprehension and foreboding always, of evil; anticipation and antepast, commonly of good. Thus, we speak of the pleasures of anticipation. A foretaste may be of good or evil, and is more than imaginary; it is a part actually received in advance. Foresight and forethought prevent future evil and secure future good by timely looking forward, and acting upon what is foreseen. Compare ANTICIPATE.—Ant.: astonishment, consummation, despair, doubt, dread, enjoyment, fear, realization, surprize, wonder.

Syn.: (adj.) ancient, antiquated, old-fashioned, quaint, superannuated. Antique refers to an ancient, antiquated to a discarded style. The antique is that which is either ancient in fact or ancient in style. The reference is to the style rather than to the age. We can speak of the antique architecture of a church just built. The antiquated is not so much out of date as out of vogue. Old-fashioned may be used approvingly or contemptuously. In the latter case it becomes a synonym for antiquated; in the good sense it approaches the meaning of antique, but indicates less duration. We call a wide New England fireplace old-fashioned; a coin of the Cæsars, antique. Quaint combines the idea of age with a pleasing oddity; as, a quaint gambrel-roofed house. Antiquated is sometimes used of persons in a sense akin to superannuated. The antiquated person is out of style and out of sympathy with the present generation by reason of age; the superannuated person is incapacitated for present activities by reason of age. Compare ANCIENT; OLD.—Ant.: fashionable, fresh, modern, modish, new, recent, stylish.

Syn.: calmness, composure, immobility, impassibility, indifference, insensibility, lethargy, phlegm, quietness, quietude, sluggishness, stillness, stoicism, tranquillity, unconcern, unfeelingness. Apathy, according to its Greek derivation, is a simple absence of feeling or emotion. While apathy is want of feeling, calmness is feeling without agitation. Composure results ordinarily from force of will, or from perfect confidence in one's own resources. Indifference is a want of interest; insensibility is a want of feeling; unconcern has reference to consequences. We speak of insensibility of heart, immobility of countenance. Stoicism is an intentional suppression of feeling and deadening of sensibilities, while apathy is involuntary. Compare CALM; REST; STUPOR.—Ant.: agitation, alarm, anxiety, care, distress, disturbance, eagerness, emotion, excitement, feeling, frenzy, fury, passion, sensibility, sensitiveness, storm, susceptibility, sympathy, turbulence, vehemence, violence.

Syn.: addendum, addition, supplement. We add an appendix to a book, as a dictionary, to contain names, dates, lists, etc., which would encumber the text; we add a supplement to supply omissions, as, for instance, to bring it up to date. An addition might be matter interwoven in the body of the work, an index, plates, editorial notes, etc., which might be valuable additions, but are not within the meaning of appendix or supplement. See APPENDAGE.—Prep.: to, of; rarely, from.

—appendix vermiformis, same as VERMIFORM APPENDIX.

ap-por'tion, 1 a-pōr'shən; 2 ă-pōr'shon, vt. To divide and assign proportionally; allot. [< L. ad, to, + portio, portion.]

Syn.: allot, appoint, appropriate, assign, deal, dispense, distribute, divide, grant, share. To allot or assign may be to make an arbitrary division; the same is true of distribute or divide. That which is apportioned is given by some fixed rule, which is meant to be uniform and fair; as, representatives are apportioned among the States according to population. To dispense is to give out freely; as, the sun dispenses light and heat. One may apportion what he only holds in trust; he shares what is his own. Compare ALLOT.—Ant.: cling to, collect, consolidate, divide arbitrarily, gather together, keep together, receive, retain.

Prep.: to, between, or among.—ap-por'tion-ment, n.

ap-pre'ci-ate, 1 ə-prī'shi-ēt; 2 ă-prē'shi-āt, v. [-AT'ED[d]; -AT'ING.] I. t. 1. To esteem adequately; perceive distinctly. 2. To raise in value. 3. To estimate. 4. To be keenly sensible of or sensitive to. II. i. To increase in value. [< L.[LL] ad, to, + pretium, price.]

Syn.: esteem, estimate, prize, value. A jeweler estimates a diamond as worth so much cash; the owner may value it beyond price, as a family heirloom, or he may prize it as the gift of an esteemed friend, without appreciating its commercial value.—Ant.: depreciate, despise, flout, misjudge, scorn, undervalue.

—ap-pre'ci-a-bl(e[P], a. That may be appreciated; perceptible.—ap-pre'ci-a-bly, adv.—ap-pre"ci-a'tion, n. 1. An appreciating; true or adequate estimation or recognition. 2. Increase in value.—ap-pre'ci-a-tiv(e[S], a. -ly, adv. -ness, n.—ap-pre'ci-a"tor, n. 1. One who appreciates. 2. An apparatus by means of which the proportion of gluten in flour is determined.—ap-pre'ci-a-to"ri-ly, adv.—ap-pre'ci-a-to-ry, a.

ap"pre-hend'd, 1 ap"ri-hend'; 2 ăp"re-hĕnd', v. I. t. 1. To lay hold of or grasp mentally; perceive. 2. To have an impression or opinion of; know partially. 3. To expect with anxious foreboding; be apprehensive of or concerning. 4. To arrest. 5†. To take hold of. II. i. 1. To think or suppose; surmise; conjecture. 2. To look forward with foreboding; fear. 3. To grasp a truth or statement; perceive. [< L. apprehendo, < ad, to, + prehendo, seize.]

Syn.: anticipate, arrest, catch, comprehend, conceive, grasp, imagine, know, perceive, understand. In strictness we perceive only what is presented through the senses. We apprehend what is presented to the mind by any means whatever. A child can apprehend the distinction between right and wrong, yet the philosopher cannot comprehend it in its fulness. Compare ALARM; IDEA.—Ant.: fail of, ignore, lose, misapprehend, miss, overlook.

—ap"pre-hend'er, n.—ap"pre-hen"si-bil'i-ty, n.—ap"pre-hen'si-bl(e[P], a. Capable of being apprehended.—ap"pre-hen'sion, n. 1. Distrust or dread concerning the future; foreboding; misgiving; presentiment. 2. Cognition; conception; estimate; idea; opinion. 3. The faculty that apprehends; capacity. 4. Legal arrest. 5. A mental image. Syn.: art, blind, cheat, contrivance, craft, cunning, device, dodge, finesse, fraud, guile, imposture, invention, machination, maneuver, ruse, stratagem, subterfuge, trick, wile. An artifice, contrivance, or device may be either good or bad. A cheat is a mean advantage in a bargain; a fraud, any form of covert robbery or injury. Imposture is a deceitful contrivance for securing charity, credit, or consideration. A stratagem or maneuver may be good or bad. A wile is often but not necessarily evil. A trick is commonly low, injurious, and malicious, but the word is used playfully with less than its full meaning. A ruse or a blind may be quite innocent and harmless. An artifice is a carefully and delicately prepared contrivance for doing indirectly what one could not well do directly. A device is something studied out for promoting an end, as in a mechanism. Finesse is especially subtle contrivance, delicate artifice, whether for good or evil.—Ant.: artlessness, candor, fairness, frankness, guilelessness, honesty, ingenuousness, innocence, openness, simplicity, sincerity, truth.

Syn.: artificer, artizan, mechanic, operative, workman. Artist is a grossly abused word since, along with the painter and the sculptor, the barber and the cook also claim the title. Mechanic and artizan ought to be restored to their place in English, and artist held to its true meaning. The work of the artist is creative; that of the artizan mechanical. The artificer is between the two, putting more thought, intelligence, and taste into his work than the artizan, but less of the idealizing, creative power than the artist. The man who constructs anything by mere routine and rule is a mechanic. The man whose work involves thought, skill, and constructive power is an artificer. The hod-carrier is a laborer; the bricklayer is a mechanic; the master mason is an artificer. Those who operate machinery nearly self-acting are operatives.

as-sume', 1 ą-siūm'; 2 ă-sūm', v. [AS-SUMED'; AS-SUM'ING.] I. t. 1. To arrogate to oneself; as, to assume a haughty mien. 2. To take upon oneself; undertake. 3. To take for granted; suppose. 4. To affect; pretend. 5. To take into or up. (1) To take into partnership, employment, or the like. (2) § To take up into heaven, as Elias. II. i. To be presumptuous. [< L. ad, to, + sumo, take.]

Syn.: accept, affect, appropriate, arrogate, claim, feign, postulate, presume, pretend, put on, take, usurp. The distinctive idea of assume is to take by one's own independent volition, whether well or ill, rightfully or wrongfully. One may accept an obligation or assume an authority that properly belongs to him; if he assumes what does not belong to him, he is said to arrogate or usurp it. A man may usurp the substance of power in the most unpretending way; what he arrogates to himself he assumes with a haughty and overbearing manner. One assumes the robes or insignia of office by putting them on, with or without right. If he takes to himself the credit and appearance of qualities he does not possess, he is said to affect or feign, or to pretend to, the character he thus assumes. What a debater postulates he openly states and takes for granted without proof; what he assumes he may take for granted without mention. A favorite trick of the sophist is quietly to assume as true what would at once be challenged if expressly stated. What a man claims he asserts his right to take; what he assumes he takes. See PRETEND.—Ant.: see synonyms for RENOUNCE.—as-sum'a-bl(eᴮˡ, a.—as-sumed', pa. 1. Taken for granted. 2. Pretended; fictitious.—as-sum'ing, pa. Presumptuous; arrogant.

as-sur'ance, 1 a-shūr'ans; 2 ă-shur'anç, n. 1. The act of assuring; any encouraging declaration; a promise. 2. Full confidence; undoubting conviction. 3. Self-confidence. 4. Boldness; effrontery. 5. Insurance. 6. Firmness of mind.

Syn.: arrogance, assertion, assumption, boldness, confidence, effrontery, impudence, presumption, self-assertion, self-confidence, self-reliance, trust. Assurance may have the good sense of a high, sustained confidence and trust; as, the saint's assurance of heaven. Confidence is founded upon reasons; assurance is largely a matter of feeling. In the bad sense, assurance is a vicious courage, with belief of one's ability to outwit or defy others; the hardened criminal is remarkable for habitual assurance. In the bad sense, assurance is less gross than impudence, which (according to its etymology) a shameless boldness. Assurance is in act or manner; impudence may be in speech. Effrontery is impudence defiantly displayed. Compare BELIEF; CERTAINTY; EFFRONTERY; FAITH; IMPUDENCE; PRIDE.—Ant.: bashfulness, confusion, consternation, dismay, distrust, doubt, hesitancy, misgiving, shyness, timidity.

as-tute', 1 as-tūt'; 2 ăs-tūt', a. Keen in discernment; acute; shrewd; sagacious; cunning. [< L. astutus, < astus, cunning.] as-tu'cious‡; as-tu'tious‡.

Syn.: acute, clear-sighted, crafty, cunning, discerning, discriminating, keen, knowing, penetrating, penetrative, perspicacious, sagacious, sharp, shrewd, subtile, subtle. Acute, from the Latin, suggests the sharpness of the needle's point; keen, from the Anglo-Saxon, the sharpness of the cutting edge. The astute mind adds to acuteness and keenness an element of cunning or finesse. The astute debater leads his opponents into a snare by getting them to make admissions, or urge arguments, of which he sees a result that they do not perceive. Knowing has often a slightly invidious sense. A knowing horse or dog knows more than could be expected of such an animal. A knowing child has more knowledge than would be looked for at his years, perhaps more than is quite desirable, while to speak of a child as intelligent is altogether complimentary. See ACUTE; INTELLIGENT; KNOWING.—Ant.: blind, dull, idiotic, imbecile, shallow, short-sighted, stolid, stupid, undiscerning, unintelligent.

at, 1 at; 2 ăt, prep. 1. Of a point in space: on; upon; close to; by; near; in; within. 2. Of motion: to; toward; after; by way of; through. 3. Of time: on or upon the point, stroke, or coming of; during the lapse of; in; by. 4. Of occasion, cause, or instrument: on the happening or the utterance of; in response to; because of. 5. Of degree, etc.: up to; to the extent of; corresponding to. 6. Of relations in general: in; engaged in; occupied with; connected with; dependent on; in a state or condition of. [ME. at, < AS. æt, at, to.]

Syn.: about, because of, by, during, in, near, on, on occasion of, to, toward, with, within. As regards place, at is not used with names of countries; we say in England, in France, etc.; with names of cities and towns the use of at or in depends not chiefly upon the size of the place, but upon the point of view. When we think merely of the local or geographical point, we use at; when we think of inclusive space, we employ in; as, we arrived at Liverpool; there are few rich men in this village. As regards time, at is used of a point of time, as of the hour, minute, or second; as, the train leaves at 10:30 a. m.; at is also used of indefinite divisions of time involving some duration; as, at morning, noon, or night; to lie awake at night. We say at the hour, on the day, in the year. The sense of at is virtually included in there and where, so that in the phrase "Where is it at?"—common in some parts of the United States—the at is redundant, and the expression somewhat grotesque. On with certain divisions of time has a special precision, signifying exactly at, neither before nor after; as, the train leaves every hour, on the hour; so we say on the minute, on the instant, etc.

at-tach'ment, 1 a-tach'ment or -ment; 2 ă-tăch'ment, n. 1. An attaching or a being attached; adherence; affection. 2. That by which, or the point at which, anything is attached; a bond; band; tie. 3. An appendage or adjunct. 4. Law. (1) A legal seizure of a person or property. (2) The writ commanding this seizure.

Syn.: adherence, adhesion, affection, devotion, esteem, estimation, friendship, inclination, love, regard, tenderness, union. An attachment is a feeling that binds a person by ties of heart to another person or thing; we speak of a man's adherence to his purpose, his adhesion to his party, or to anything to which he clings tenaciously, but with no special tenderness; of his attachment to his church, to the old homestead, or to any persons or objects that he may hold dear. Affection expresses more warmth of feeling; we should not speak of a mother's attachment to her babe, but of her affection, love, devotion. Inclination expresses simply a tendency, which may be good or bad, yielded to or overcome; as, an inclination to study; an inclination to drink. Regard is more distant than affection or attachment, but closer and warmer than esteem; we speak of high esteem, kind regard. Compare ACQUAINTANCE; APPENDAGE; FRIENDSHIP; LOVE; UNION.—Ant.: alienation, animosity, antipathy, aversion, coolness, dislike, distance, divorce, enmity, estrangement, indifference, opposition, repugnance, separation, severance.—Prep.: attachment of a true man to his friends; attachment to a leader for his nobility of character; attachment between two persons or things; attachment by muscular fibers, by a rope, etc.

at-tack', 1 a-tak'; 2 ă-tăk', v. I. t. 1. To set upon; begin battle or conflict with. 2. To assail with speech, etc.; criticize; censure. 3. To begin work on; set about. 4. To begin to affect seriously or injuriously; seize; as, acid attacks metal; disease attacks a person. II. i. To make an onset or assault. [< F. attaquer, for attacher, ATTACH.]

Syn.: assail, assault, beleaguer, beset, besiege, charge, combat, encounter, fall upon, invade, set upon. To attack is to begin hostilities of any kind. Assail and assault, while of the same original etymology, have diverged in meaning, so that assault alone retains the meaning of direct personal violence. One may assail another with reproaches; he assaults him with a blow, a brandished weapon, etc. To encounter is to meet face to face, and may be said either of the attacking or of the resisting force or person, or of both.—Ant.: aid, befriend, cover, defend, protect, resist, shelter, shield, support, sustain, uphold, withstand.

at-tack', n. 1. The act of attacking. 2. The first movement toward any undertaking; the offensive part in any contest. 3. An attacking force. 4. A seizure as by disease.

Syn.: aggression, assault, encroachment, incursion, infringement, intrusion, invasion, onset, onslaught, trespass. An attack may be by word; an aggression is always by deed. An assault may be upon the person, an aggression is upon rights, possessions, etc. An invasion of a nation's territories is an act of aggression; an intrusion upon a neighboring estate is a trespass. Onslaught signifies intensely violent assault, as by an army or a desperado, but it is sometimes used of violent speech. See AGGRESSION.—Ant.: defense, repulsion, resistance, retreat, submission, surrender.—Prep.: on or upon.

at"ta-ge'nus, 1 at"ə-jī'nus; ăt"a-gĕ'nŭs, n. A small black insect (Attagenus pellio) with two dots on the wing-covers, which infests museums. See plate of HARMFUL INSECTS.

at-tain', 1 a-tēn'; 2 ă-tān', v. I. t. 1. To arrive at (a desired object). 2. To come to in space or time. II. i. To arrive or reach with effort: with to. [< L.[F] ad, to, + tango, touch.]

Syn.: accomplish, achieve, acquire, arrive at, compass, earn, gain, get, grasp, master, obtain, procure, reach, secure, win. A man may obtain a situation by favor; he procures a dinner by paying for it. Attain is a lofty word, pointing to some high or desirable result; a man attains the mountain summit, he attains honor or learning as the result of strenuous and earnest labor. Even if he is said to attain or attain to old age, that is thought of as a result desired; we should not speak of his attaining his dotage. What one achieves is in itself great and splendid; as, the Greeks at Marathon achieved a glorious victory. Compare GAIN; GET; SUCCEED.—Ant.: abandon, fail, forfeit, give up, let go, lose, miss.—Prep.: to (or unto).

at-tain'a-bl(e[2], 1 a-tēn'ə-bl; 2 ă-tān'a-bl, a. That can be attained; practicable; feasible.—at-tain"a-bil'i-ty, at-tain'a-bl(e-ness‡, n.

Attainder was finally abolished in England in 1870. 2‖. Dishonor; stain.—bill of attainder (Eng. Law.), an act of Parliament pronouncing sentence of death against an accused person, with consequent extinction of civil rights.

at-tain'ment, 1 a-tēn'ment or -ment; 2 ă-tān'ment, n. 1. The act of attaining. 2. That which is attained; an acquisition.

Syn.: accomplishment, acquirement, acquisition. These words are each oftenest used in the plural. Accomplishments are showy, graceful, pleasing; acquirements are substantial and useful; attainments are lofty and ennobling. Acquisitions, unless otherwise expressly stated, are understood to be of money or property. Compare WISDOM.

at-taint', 1 a-tēnt'; 2 ă-tānt'. I[2]. vt. 1. To disgrace; inflict attainder upon; condemn. 2. To touch or affect; seize upon, as disease. 3‖. To accuse: with of. 4†. To touch; hit, as in tilting; attain. II. n. 1. Imputation; stigma. 2. Attainder. 3‖. A hit, as in tilting. attrib., abbr. Attributive, attributively.

at-trib'ute, 1 a-trib'yut; 2 ă-trĭb'yut, vt. [-UT-EDᵈ; -UT-ING.] To ascribe (something) as due and belonging, caused by, or owing to; assign; refer: with to. [< L. ad, to, + tribuo, allot.]

Syn.: ascribe, assign, associate, charge, connect, impute, refer. We may attribute to a person either that which belongs to him or that which we merely suppose to be his. We may attribute a result, rightly or wrongly, to a certain cause; in such case, however, attribute carries always a concession of uncertainty or possible error. Where we are quite sure, we simply refer a matter to the cause or class to which it belongs or ascribe to one what is surely his, etc. Many diseases formerly attributed to witchcraft are now referred to the action of micro-organisms. We associate things which may have no necessary or causal relation; as, we may associate the striking of a clock with the serving of dinner. We charge a person with what we deem blameworthy. We may impute good or evil, but more commonly evil.—Ant.: deny, disconnect, dissociate, separate, sever, sunder.—PREP.: to (archaic unto).—at-trib'u-ta-bl(eᵖˢ, a.

at'tri-bute, 1 at'ri-biūt; 2 ăt'ri-būt, n. 1. That which is attributed; a characteristic. 2. Art & Myth. A distinctive mark or symbol. 3. Gram. An adjective or its equivalent. 4‡. Repute; honor.

Syn.: property, quality. A quality (L. qualis, such) denotes what a thing really is in some one respect; an attribute is what we conceive a thing to be in some one respect; thus, while attribute may, quality must, express something of the real nature of that to which it is ascribed; we speak of the attributes of God, the qualities of matter. A property (L. proprius, one's own) is what belongs especially to one thing as its own peculiar possession, in distinction from all other things; when we speak of the qualities or the properties of matter, quality is the more general, property the more limited term; but in the widest use of the word property, it becomes strictly synonymous with quality. Compare CHARACTERISTIC; EMBLEM; FIGURE.—Ant.: being, essence, nature, substance.

Syn.: acknowledge, admit, aver, avouch, confess, declare, own, proclaim, profess, protest, testify, witness. To avow is to declare boldly and openly, commonly as something one is ready to justify, maintain or defend against challenge or opposition. A man acknowledges another's claim or his own promise; he admits an opponent's advantage or his own error; he declares either what he has seen or experienced or what he has received from another; he avers what he is sure of from his own knowledge or consciousness; he gives his assurance as the voucher for what he avouches; he avows openly a belief or intention that he has silently held. Avow and avouch take a direct object; aver is followed by a conjunctive clause: a man avows his faith, avouches a deed, avers that he was present. Compare ACKNOWLEDGE; AFFIRM; ALLEGE; ASSERT; CONFESS; STATE.—Ant.: contradict, deny, disclaim, disown, ignore, repudiate.

Syn.: alarming, appalling, august, dire, direful, dread, dreadful, fearful, frightful, grand, horrible, imposing, majestic, noble, portentous, shocking, solemn, stately, terrible, terrific. Awful should not be used of things which are merely disagreeable or annoying, nor of all that are alarming and terrible, but only of such as bring a solemn awe upon the soul, as in the presence of a superior power; as the awful hush before the battle. That which is awful arouses an oppressive, that which is august an admiring, reverence; we speak of the august presence of a mighty monarch, the awful presence of death. We speak of an exalted station, a grand mountain, an imposing presence, a majestic cathedral, a noble mien, a solemn litany, a stately march, an august assembly, the awful scene of the Judgment Day. See FRIGHTFUL; GRAND.—Ant.: base, beggarly, commonplace, contemptible, despicable, humble, inferior, lowly, mean, paltry, undignified, vulgar.

awk′ward, 1 ôk′wərd; 2 ak′ward, a. 1. Ungraceful in bearing; unskilful in action; bungling. 2. Embarrassing or perplexing; also, difficult or dangerous to deal with, as an opponent. 3†. Perverse; untoward. [< awk (< Ice. öfug, afug, back foremost) + -WARD.]

Syn.: boorish, bungling, clownish, clumsy, gawky, maladroit, uncouth, ungainly, unhandy, unskilful. Awkward, from awk (kindred with off), is offward, turned the wrong way; it was anciently used of a back-handed blow in battle, of squinting eyes, etc. Clumsy originally signified benumbed, stiffened with cold; as, clumsy fingers; clumsy limbs. Thus, awkward primarily refers to action, clumsy to condition. A tool, a vehicle, or the human frame may be clumsy in shape or build, awkward in motion. A dancing bear is both clumsy and awkward. See RUSTIC.—Ant.: adroit, clever, dexterous, handy, skilful.

axˈi-om, 1 aksˈi-əm; 2 ăksˈi-om, n. A self-evident or necessary truth; hence, any proposition or principle that men universally accept. [< Gr. axiōma, < agō, lead, weigh.]

Syn.: truism. Both the axiom and the truism are instantly seen to be true, and need no proof; but in an axiom there is progress of thought, while the truism simply says the same thing over again, or says what is too manifest to need saying. The axiom that "things which are equal to the same thing are equal to one another" unfolds in the latter part of the sentence the truth implied in the first part, which might have been overlooked if not stated. In the truism that "a man can do all he is capable of," the former and the latter part of the sentence are simply identical and the mind is left just where it started. Hence the axiom is valuable and useful, while the truism is weak and flat, unless the form of statement makes it striking or racy, as "all fools are out of their wits." Compare ADAGE; PROVERB.—Ant.: absurdity, contradiction, demonstration, nonsense, paradox, sophism.

—ax″i-o-matˈic, a. Pertaining to or of the nature of an axiom; self-evident. ax″i-o-matˈi-cal†.—ax″i-o-matˈi-cal-ly, adv.

B

B b Roman. 𝔅 𝔟 Black Letter. B b Script.

B, b, 1 bī; 2 bē, n. [BEES, B's, or Bs, 1 bīz; 2 bēş, pl.] 1. The second letter in the English alphabet, or its sound. In English, when this letter is pronounced its sound is uniform. Initial b is always pronounced when followed by a vowel; it is not pronounced when followed by d. as in bdellium (1 del′ı-um; 2 dĕl′i-ûm). Final b, preceded by m. as in bomb, crumb, dumb, tomb, etc., is silent except in rhomb. It is also silent in certain unphonetic words such as debt, doubt, subtle, etc., but in the combination bs the s is pronounced as z, as in cubs (1 kubz, 2 cûbs); hubs (1 hubz, 2 hûbs).

When the Christian teachers replaced the old futhorc with the Roman alphabet, B became the second letter, as in the Greek and Hebrew. It is closely related in sound to the letters f, m, p, v, and w.

Syn.: blab, blurt, blurt out, cackle, chat, chatter, gabble, gossip, jabber, murmur, palaver, prate, prattle, tattle, twaddle. Most of these words are onomatopoetic. The cackle of a hen, the gabble of a goose, the chatter of a magpie, the babble of a running stream, as applied to human speech, indicate a rapid succession of what are to the listener meaningless sounds. Blab and blurt (commonly blurt out) refer to the letting out of what the lips can no longer keep in; blab, of a secret; blurt out, of passionate feeling. To chat is to talk in an easy, pleasant way, not without sense, but without special purpose; to prattle is to talk freely and artlessly, often about trifles; chatting is the practise of adults, prattling that of children. To prate is to talk idly, presumptuously, or foolishly, but not necessarily incoherently. To jabber is to utter a rapid succession of unintelligible sounds, generally more noisy than chattering. To gossip is to talk of petty personal matters, as for pastime or mischief. To twaddle is to talk feeble nonsense. To murmur is to utter suppressed or even inarticulate sounds, suggesting the notes of a dove, or the sound of a running stream, and is used figuratively of the half-suppressed utterances of affection or pity, or of complaint, resentment, etc. Compare SPEAK.—Prep.: babies babble for the moon; the crowd babbles of a hero; the sick man babbles of home.—bab′ble-ment, n.—bab′bler, n.

be, 1 bi; 2 bē, vi. [AM, ART, IS, ARE, pres.; WAS, WAST, WERE, imp.; BE, WERE, WERT, subj.; BE, imper.; BEEN, pp.; BEING, ppr.]

This verb, which is called the substantive verb, is defective, and its conjugation is made up of fragments of three independent verbs, furnishing be, am, and was, respectively.

1. To have existence; possess truth or actuality. 2. To exist in a special state, relation, etc. 3. To take place; happen. 4. To belong; pertain; concern: with to. [< AS. beōn, be.]

The proper case of a personal pronoun following be and in apposition with its subject is the nominative, as the case is simply one of apposition, and the pronoun in apposition with the nominative must itself be in that case; as, It is I, be not afraid; it is he. Before the 19th century the objectives me, him, her, etc., in such constructions (if at the end of a sentence) were somewhat commoner in literary usage than I, he, she, etc. The objective forms are still common in colloquial use, owing probably to the fact that many sentences are so formed that they require the pronoun at the end of a sentence to be in the objective case, and that case is accordingly the more natural one in that place.

—be that as it will, be that as it may: erroneous form.

be-, prefix. By; near; on; about: used (1) in its original prepositional sense; (2) to render intransitive verbs transitive; (3) to form verbs from adjectives or nouns; (4) to intensify the notion of a verb; (5) to give a secondary meaning to a simple verb; (6) with nouns, adjectives, or adverbs, to form other adverbs, conjunctions, or prepositions; (7) with privative force; that is, to give a meaning opposed to that of the simple word; (8) without special force. [< AS. be-, bi-, < bī, by.]

Compounds of be- especially needing definition are given in vocabulary place. Many arbitrary combinations of be-, that may be made at will by prefixing be- to a verb, a noun, or a participle, are omitted. Some self-explaining forms may be classed as follows: (1) Verbs or participial adjectives (sometimes with derived nouns) that by the prefix be- are made more emphatic, or, when made from nouns, signify to make like or affect with what the noun indicates; as, bepelt, to pelt soundly; beshine, to shine upon or about:

be-deaf'en	be-gird'[d]	be-mois'ten	be-sing'
be-drab'ble	be-girt'[d]	be-mourn'	be-slub'ber be-drench't	be-hang'	be-mud'dle	be-soil'
be-drug'	be-howl'	be-muse'	be-spread'
be-dye'	be-li'bel	be-praise'	be-stain'
be-fool'	be-maze'	be-rat'tle[d]	be-stud'[d]
be-foul'	be-mir'ror	be-screen'	be-thump't be-fud'dle	be-mock't	be-shroud'[d]	be-thwack't

(2) Verbs or participial adjectives (sometimes with derived nouns) that by the prefix be- add the sense of supplying with, covering, daubing, thoroughly treating, strewing or scattering over, or the like; as, beink, to daub or cover with ink:

be-clothe'	be-gem'	be-patched't	be-slob'ber
be-crown'	be-gild't	be-plas'ter	be-smoke't be-drop'	be-gir'dle	be-rime'	be-snow'
be-feath'er	be-grime'	be-ringed'	be-span'gle
be-flecked't	be-jew'el	be-sil'ver	be-streak't be-flow'er	be-li'bel	be-slab'ber	be-wig'
be-foam'	be-mire'	be-slav'er	be-wim'ple be-fringe'	be-paint'	be-slime'	be-won'der

(3) Verbs that by the prefix be- add the sense of naming or calling; as, beduke, to call one "duke":

be-duke't	be-la'dy	be-mad'am	be-saint'[d]
be-knave'	be-lord'[d]	be-mon'ster	be-scoun'drel

(4) Verbs in which be- modifies the meaning of a simple verb by adding a prepositional relation so that it either becomes transitive or takes a different object:

be-splash'	be-strad'dle	be-tram'ple	be-weep'
be-sprin'kle	be-strew'	be-tread'[d]	be-wrap'

[< AS. bēatan, beat, thrust.] bete†.

Syn.: bastinado, batter, belabor, bruise, castigate, chastise, conquer, cudgel, cuff, defeat, flog, overcome, pommel, pound, scourge, smite, strike surpass, thrash, vanquish, whip, worst. Strike is the word for a single blow; to beat is to strike repeatedly, as a bird beats the air with its wings. Others of the words above describe the manner of beating, as bastinado, to beat on the soles of the feet; belabor, to inflict a comprehensive and exhaustive beating; cudgel, to beat with a stick; thrash (originally identical with "thresh"), to beat with repeated blows, as wheat was beaten out with the old hand-flail; to pound (akin to L. pondus, a weight) is to beat with a heavy, and pommel with a blunt, instrument. To batter and to bruise refer to the results of beating; that is battered which is broken or defaced by repeated blows on the surface (compare synonyms for SHATTER); that is bruised which has suffered even one severe contusion. The metaphorical sense of beat, however, so far preponderates that one may be very badly bruised and battered, and yet not be said to be beaten, unless he has got the worst of the beating. To beat a combatant is to disable or dishearten him for further fighting. Hence beat becomes the synonym for every word which implies getting the advantage of another. Compare CONQUER; SUBDUE.—Ant.: fail, fall, get the worst of, go down, go under, surrender. Almost all antonyms in this class are passive, and can be formed indefinitely from the conquering words by the use of the auxiliary be; as, be beaten, be defeated, be conquered, etc.

beau'te-ous, } 1 biū'tı-us; 2 bū'te-ŭs, a. Full of beauty;
beu'te-ousP, ∫ beautiful. Syn.: see BEAUTIFUL. -ly, adv.

beau'ti-ful, } 1 biū'tı-ful; 2 bū'tı-ful, a. Possessing conbeu'ti-fulP, ∫ spicuous beauty; excelling in form or grace; complete and harmonious.

Syn.: attractive, beauteous, bewitching, bonny, charming, comely, delightful, elegant, exquisite, fair, fine, graceful, handsome, lovely, picturesque, pretty. There must be harmony and unity, and in human beings spiritual loveliness, to constitute an object or a person really beautiful. Thus, we speak of a beautiful landscape, a beautiful poem. But beautiful implies also, in concrete objects, softness of outline and delicacy of mold; it is opposed to all that is hard and rugged. Pretty expresses in a far less degree that which is pleasing to a refined taste in objects comparatively small, slight, and dainty. That is handsome which is not only superficially pleasing, but well and harmoniously proportioned. Handsome is a term far inferior to beautiful; we may even say a handsome villain; figuratively, handsome denotes liberal, magnanimous, or generous in a high and worthy way. Fair denotes what is bright, smooth, clear, and without blemish; as, a fair face. The word applies wholly to what is superficial; we can say "fair, yet false." In a specific sense, fair has the sense of blond, as opposed to dark or brunette. One who possesses pleasing qualities may be attractive without beauty. Comely denotes an aspect that is smooth, genial, and wholesome, with a certain fulness of contour and pleasing symmetry, while falling short of the beautiful; as, a comely matron. That is picturesque which would make a striking picture. See FINE; GRACEFUL; LOVELY.—Ant.: awkward, clumsy, deformed, disgusting, frightful, ghastly, grim, grisly, grotesque, hideous, horrid, odious, repulsive, shocking, ugly, unattractive, uncouth, ungainly, unlovely, unpleasant.—Prep.: beautiful to the eye; beautiful in appearance, in spirit; "beautiful for situation," Ps. xlviii, 2: beautiful of aspect, of this kind.

—beau'ti-ful, n. Beauty in the abstract; also, that which is beautiful.—beau'ti-ful-ly, adv.—beau'ti-ful-ness, n.—beau'ti-fy, vt. & vi. [-FIED; -FY"ING.] To make or grow beautiful; em-be-cause′, 1 bi-kēz′; 2 be-cąş′. I. adv. By reason (of). II. conj. For the reason that (literally, by cause); since. [< BE- + CAUSE, n.]

Syn.: as, for, forasmuch as, inasmuch as, since. Because, literally by-cause, is the most direct and complete word for giving the reason of a thing. Since, originally denoting succession in time, signifies a succession in a chain of reasoning, a natural inference or result. As indicates something like, coordinate, parallel. Since is weaker than because; as is weaker than since; either may introduce the reason before the main statement; thus, since or as you are going, I will accompany you. Often the weaker word is the more courteous, implying less constraint: for example, as you request it, I will come, rather than I will come because you request it. Inasmuch as is a formal and qualified expression, implying by just so much, and no more; thus, inasmuch as the debtor has no property, I abandon the claim. Forasmuch as is archaic, rarely appearing in present use. For is a loose connective, sometimes fully equal to because, but oftener giving mere suggestion or indication rather than reason or cause; as, it is morning, for (not because) the birds are singing.—Ant.: altho, however, nevertheless, notwithstanding, yet. Compare also synonyms for BUT; NOTWITHSTANDING; THEREFORE.—Prep.: because of is used as a prepositional phrase, signifying by reason of, on account of.

be-com′ing, ⌊ 1 bi-kum′ıŋ; 2 be-cŏm′ing, pa. 1. Approbe-cum′ing‡, ⌋ priate; suitable. 2. Pleasing; adorning.

Syn.: befitting, beseeming, comely, congruous, decent, decorous, fit, fitting, graceful, meet, neat, proper, seemly, suitable, worthy. That is becoming in dress which suits the complexion, figure, and other qualities of the wearer, so as to produce on the whole a pleasing effect. That is decent which does not offend modesty or propriety. That is suitable which is adapted to the age, station, situation, and other circumstances of the wearer; coarse, heavy boots are suitable for farm-work; a juvenile style of dress is not suitable for an old lady. In conduct much the same rules apply. The dignity and gravity of a patriarch would not be becoming to a child; at a funeral lively, cheery sociability would not be decorous, while noisy hilarity would not be decent. sumptuous display would not be suitable for a poor person. Fit is a compendious term for whatever fits the person, time, place, occasion, etc.; as, a fit person; a fit abode; a fit place. Fitting, or befitting, is somewhat more elegant, implying a nicer adaptation. Meet is somewhat archaic, expressing now chiefly a moral fitness; as, meet for heaven. Compare APPROPRIATE; BEAUTIFUL.—Ant.: awkward, ill-becoming, ill-fitting, improper, indecent, indecorous, unbecoming, unfit, unseemly, unsuitable.—Prep.: the dress was becoming to the wearer; such conduct was becoming in him.—be-com′ing-ly, adv.—be-com′ing-ness, n.

Syn.: arising, commencement, fount, fountain, inauguration, inception, initiation, opening, origin, outset, rise, source, spring, start. The Latin commencement is more formal than the Anglo-Saxon beginning, as the verb commence is more formal than begin. Commencement is for the most part restricted to some form of action, while beginning has no restriction, but may be applied to whatever may be conceived of as having a first part, point, degree, etc. The letter A is at the beginning (not the commencement) of every alphabet. In numerous cases begin and beginning are preferable to commence and commencement. "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." Gen. 1, 1. An origin is the point from which something starts or sets out, often involving causal connection; as the origin of evil; the origin of a nation, government, or a family. A source is that which furnishes a first and continuous supply; as, the source of a river; a source of knowledge; a source of inspiration: fertile land is a source (not an origin) of wealth. A rise is thought of as in an action; we say that a lake is the source of a certain river, or that the river takes its rise from the lake. Fount, fountain, and spring, in their figurative senses, keep close to their literal meaning. Compare CAUSE.—Ant.: see synonyms for END.

bend, 1 bend; 2 bĕnd, v. [BENT or BEND'ED[2]; BEND'ING.] I. t. 1. To bring into a curve, or out of or aside from a straight line; crook; deflect; direct. 2. To apply closely, as the mind. 3. To subdue. 4. Naut. To make fast; tie. 5. [Rare or Obs.] Figuratively, to brace up: generally followed by up. II. i. 1. To take a curved shape. 2. To take a certain direction. 3. To yield; submit; conform. 4. To devote oneself vigorously. 5. To overhang. 6. [Scot.] To drink hard. 7†. To turn. [< AS. bendan, bend, < bend, band, bond.]

Syn.: bias, bow, crook, curve, deflect, deviate, diverge, incline, influence, mold, persuade, stoop, submit, turn, twine, twist, warp, yield. In some cases a thing is spoken of as bent where the parts make an angle; but oftener to bend is understood to be to draw to or through a curve; as, to bend a bow. To submit or yield is to bend the mind humbly to another's wishes. To incline or influence is to bend another's wishes toward our own; to persuade is to draw them quite over. To warp is to bend slightly through the whole fiber, as a board in the sun. To crook is to bend irregularly, as a crooked stick. Deflect, deviate, and diverge are said of any turning away from a direct line; deviate commonly of a slight and gradual movement, diverge of a more sharp and decided one. To bias is to influence feeling, opinion, or action in the direction of some prevailing (often unconscious) tendency; personal enmity against the accused will bias a witness or a juror so as to distort his view of the facts or motives involved in the case. Mold is a stronger word than bend; we may bend by a superior force that which still resists the constraint, as, a bent bow; we mold something plastic entirely and permanently to some desired form. See TWIST.

Syn.: almsgiving, beneficence, benignity, bounty, charity, generosity, good will, humanity, kind-heartedness, kindliness, kindness, liberality, munificence, philanthropy, sympathy. Originally beneficence was the doing well, benevolence the wishing or willing well to others; but benevolence has come to include beneficence and to displace it. We do not now speak of benevolence which does not help. Charity, which originally meant the purest love for God and man (as in 1 Cor. iii), is now almost universally applied to some form of almsgiving and is much more limited in meaning than benevolence. Benignity suggests some occult power of blessing, such as was formerly ascribed to the stars; we may say a good man has an air of benignity. Kindness and tenderness are personal; benevolence and charity are general. Humanity is so much kindness and tenderness toward man or beast as it would be inhuman not to have, as denoted by the phrase, "common humanity." We speak of the bounty of a generous host, the liberality or munificence of the founder of a college, or of the liberality of a theologian toward the holders of conflicting beliefs. Philanthropy applies to wide schemes for human welfare, often, but not always, involving large expenditures in charity or benevolence. Compare MERCY.—Ant.: barbarity, brutality, churlishness, greediness, harshness, illiberality, ill-will, inhumanity, malevolence, malignity, niggardliness, selfishness, self-seeking, stinginess, unkindness.

ben'zene, 1 ben'zin; 2 bĕn'zēn, n. A colorless, volatile, inflammable compound liquid (C_6H_6) obtained chiefly from coal-tar by fractional distillation: preferred word for benzol. It is produced when benzoic acid is heated with lime. It burns with a luminous flame, has an ethereal odor, and is useful as a solvent, dissolving fats, resins, iodin, phosphorus, etc. It is employed as an illuminant in gas-manufacture; and is important as the starting-point in the formation of the compounds of the benzene series: it is also the source of the anilin of commerce. [< BENZOIN.] ben'zol†; ben'zole†.—benzene ring or nucleus, the graphic formula of benzene. The hexagon formula (see diagram) shows that the six hydrogen atoms have equal value. Hence there can be but one mono-substitution product for a single element or radical. A di-substitution product may have three modifications according to the relative position of the substituting atoms or radicals, such positions being indicated by the prefixes ortho-, meta-, and para-, which correspond to the positions (1, 2), (1, 3) and (1, 4) when the number notation is used.

Syn.: acerb, acetous, acid, acidulated, acidulous, acrid, acrimonious, biting, caustic, cutting, harsh, irate, pungent, savage, sharp, sour, stinging, tart, vinegarish, virulent. Acid, sour, and bitter agree in being contrasted with sweet, but the two former are sharply distinguished from the latter. Acid or sour applies to the taste of vinegar or lemon-juice; bitter to that of quassia, quinin, or strychnin. Acrid is nearly allied to bitter. Pungent suggests the effect of pepper or snuff on the organs of taste or smell; as, a pungent odor. Caustic indicates the corroding effect of some strong chemical, as nitrate of silver. In a figurative sense we say a sour face, sharp words, bitter complaints, caustic wit, cutting irony, biting sarcasm, a stinging taunt, harsh judgment, a tart reply. Harsh carries the idea of intentional and severe unkindness, bitter of a severity that arises from real or supposed ill treatment. The bitter speech springs from the sore heart. Tart and sharp utterances may proceed merely from a wit recklessly keen; cutting, stinging, or biting speech indicates more or less of hostile intent. The caustic utterance is meant to burn, perhaps wholesomely, as in the satire of Juvenal or Cervantes. Compare MALICIOUS; MOROSE.—Ant.: dulcet, honeyed, luscious, nectared, saccharine, sweet.

both, 1 bōth; 2 bōth. I. a. The two inclusively or together; the one and the other alike. II. pron. The two, including the one and the other; the pair. III. adv. & conj. Equally; alike; as well. [< Ice. bāthir; cp. AS. bā, both.] Syn.: twain, two. Both refers to two objects previously mentioned, or had in mind, viewed or acting in connection; as, both men fired at once; "two men fired" might mean any two, out of any number, and without reference to any previous thought or mention. In negative sentences both is often ambiguous; as, "Both applicants were not accepted." The confusion in meaning of a negative sentence containing both will be best avoided by making the sentence affirmative: "Both applicants were rejected"; "one of the two applicants was rejected and the other accepted," or the like. As an adjective or pronoun both emphasizes the idea of two. It has been well defined as "the two, and not merely one of them"; it should not be connected with or refer to more than two objects. But as a conjunction both has a more extended meaning than it has as an adjective or a pronoun; thus, it is permissible to say, "He lost all his five stock—both horses, cows, and sheep." When so used it emphasizes the extent or comprehensiveness of the assertion. This use has abundant literary authority, and antedates Chaucer. In some sentences both is erroneously used; as, "They are both alike." Here both is redundant. Twain is a nearly obsolete form of two. The two, or the twain, is practically equivalent to both; both, however, expresses a closer unity. We would say both men rushed against the enemy; the two men flew at each other. Compare EVERY.—Ant.: each, either, every, neither, none, no one, not any.

bound'a-ry, 1 baund'a-rı; 2 bound'a-ry, n. [-RIES[z], pl.] A limiting or dividing line or mark; also, any object serving to indicate a limit or confine.

Syn.: barrier, border, bound, bourn, bourne, confines, edge, enclosure, frontier, landmark, limit, line, marches, marge, margin, term, termination, verge. The boundary was originally the landmark, that which marked off one piece of territory from another. The bound is the limit, marked or unmarked. Now, however, the difference between the two words has come to be simply one of usage. As regards territory, we speak of the boundaries of a nation or of an estate; the bounds of a college, a ball-ground, etc. Bounds may be used for all within the limits. Boundary for the limiting line only. Boundary looks to that which is without; bound only to that which is within. Hence we speak of the bounds, not the boundaries, of a subject, of the universe, etc.; we say the students were forbidden to go beyond the bounds. A barrier is something that bars ingress or egress. A barrier may be a boundary, as was the Great Wall of China. Bourn, or bourne, is a poetical expression for bound or boundary. A border is a strip, as of land, along the boundary. Edge is a sharp terminal line, as where river or ocean meets the land. Limit is now used almost wholly in the figurative sense; as, the limit of discussion, of time, of jurisdiction. Line is a military term; as, within the lines, or through the lines, of an army. Compare BARRIER; END; MARGIN.—Ant.: center, citadel, estate, inside, interior, land, region, territory.

[< AS. beornan.]

Syn.: blaze, brand, cauterize, char, consume, cremate, flame, flash, ignite, incinerate, kindle, scorch, set fire to, set on fire, singe. To burn is to effect either partial change or complete combustion; as, to burn wood in the fire; to burn one's hand on a hot stove; the sun burns the face. One brands with a hot iron, but cauterizes with some corrosive substance, as silver nitrate. Cremate is now used specifically for consuming a dead body by intense heat; incinerate (to reduce to ashes) differs little from that of cremate, but is in less popular use. To kindle is to set on fire, as if with a candle; ignite is the more learned and scientific word for the same thing. To scorch and to singe are superficial, and to char usually so. Both kindle and burn have extensive figurative use; as, to kindle strife; to burn with wrath, love, devotion, curiosity. Compare LIGHT.—Ant.: cool, extinguish, put out, smother, stifle, subdue.

bus'tle[1], n. Excited activity; noisy stir; fuss.
Syn.: see TUMULT.

bus'tle[2], n. A frame or pad worn by women on the back below the waist to distend the skirts.

bus'y, 1 biz'i; 2 bĭs'y. I. vt. & vi. [BUS'IED; BUS'Y-ING.] To make or be busy; keep employed; occupy oneself. II. a. [BUS'I-ER; BUS'I-EST.] 1. Intensely active; constantly or habitually occupied. 2. Temporarily engaged; not at leisure. 3. Officiously active; prying; meddling. 4. Pertaining to or filled with business. 5. Telephone. Engaged: said of a line or number. [< AS. bysig, active.] Syn.: active, assiduous, diligent, employed, engaged, industrious, occupied. Busy applies to an activity which may be temporary, industrious to a habit of life. We say a man is busy just now; it would be ridiculous or satirical to say, he is industrious just now. But busy can be used in the sense of industrious, as when we say he is a busy man. Diligent indicates also a disposition, which is ordinarily habitual, and suggests more of heartiness and volition than industrious. We say one is a diligent, rather than an industrious reader of the Bible. The assiduous worker gives patient and unremitting devotion to a task until it is done, or until nothing more can be done. Compare ACTIVE; INDUSTRIOUS; INDUSTRY; (verb) see OCCUPY.—Ant.: careless, dilatory, dull, idle, inactive, indolent, lazy, listless, negligent, remiss, slack, slothful.—bus'y-bodFy, n. [-BODFIES, pl.] One who officiously meddles with the affairs of others.

but, 1 but; 2 bŭt, v. [BUT'TED[4]; BUT'TING.] To abut.

but[1], n. A verbal objection, exception, or condition; as, without any its or buts.

but[2], n. [Scot.] The kitchen or outer room of a two-roomed house. [< BUT, adv.] but[3], n. [Local, Eng.] A flounder.

but, adv. 1. No otherwise than; no more than; only; merely; simply. 2. [Scot.] In or to the outer room or outer air; out.—to be but and ben with, to live in close intimacy with.

but, prep. Leaving out; with the exception of; except; barring.

but, conj. 1. Omitting or excluding the fact that; with the exception that; except. 2. Otherwise than (that); in every direction except (that); more than (that). 3. Still, on the contrary; yet, on the other hand; nevertheless; however. 4. Tho it be true that; however that may be; notwithstanding; tho; even if. 5. In addition to that; moreover; besides; again: approaching the meaning of and. 6. From the fact that; that. 7. When; before; than. [< AS. būtan, except, without.]
Syn.: and, barely, besides, except, further, however, just, merely, moreover, nevertheless, notwithstanding, only, provided, save, still, that, tho, unless, yet. But ranges from the faintest contrast to absolute negation; as, I am willing to go, but (on the other hand) content to stay; he is not an honest man, but (on the contrary) a villain. Except and excepting are slightly more emphatic than but. Such expressions as "words are but breath" (nothing but) may be referred to the restrictive use by ellipsis. "Doubt but" is now less used than the more logical "doubt that." But never becomes a full synonym for and; and adds something like, but adds something different; "brave and tender" implies that tenderness is natural to the brave; "brave but tender" implies that bravery and tenderness are rarely combined. Care must be employed in using but immediately followed by that when both words are conjunctions. There is no difficulty when but is a preposition and that is a pronoun; as, "I will take none but that," where the phrase means except that. But is often redundant before that, but is sometimes required by the sense. In "Each by the other would have done the like but that they lacked the courage," but is essential, as introducing a reason to the contrary. The omission or insertion of but often reverses the meaning. "I have no fear that he will do it" and "I have no fear but that he will do it" have contrary senses, the former indicating the feeling of certainty that he will not do it, and the latter the feeling of certainty that he will do it. Where ambiguity or haziness results from the use of but that, it can ordinarily be avoided by recasting the sentence. But what should not be used for the conjunctive expression but that; as, "I don't know but what I did"; here the relative can not be disposed of grammatically. But what is, however, correctly used for the preposition and pronoun but that; as, "I know but what (i. e., only that which) you have just told me." But yet should not be used when either but or yet is sufficient by itself; as, "Wealth may seek us; but wisdom must be sought"; not but yet. When, however, Archbishop Trench says, "But yet these pains hand us over to true pleasures" (Study of Words p. 232), each conjunction has its distinct adversative sense. This appears still more clearly in "Ye are but common men, but [on the contrary] yet [notwithstanding that fact] ye think with minds not common" (COLERIDGE Wallenstein 2, 3). Compare NOTWITHSTANDING.—Ant.: see BECAUSE.

Syn.: by means of, through, with. By refers to the agent; through, to the means, cause, or condition; with, to the instrument. By commonly refers to persons; with, to things; through may refer to either. The road having become impassable through long disuse, a way was opened by pioneers with axes. By, however, may be applied to any object which is viewed as partaking of action and agency; as, the metal was corroded by the acid; skill is gained by practise. "His friends were displeased by the selection of another chairman" means that the action displeased them; "His friends were displeased with the selection," etc., means that the man selected was not their choice. One may say "I know no one of the name of Brown," or "I know no one by the name of Brown"; but the meaning is different. One might know a man of the name of Brown, but know him by the name of Smith. It is better to say simply "a man named Brown." We speak of communicating with a person by letter. Through implies a more distant connection than by or with, and more intervening elements. Material objects are perceived by the mind through the senses. By is in frequent use after call, judge, know, measure, perceive, see, seem, take, understand, etc., to indicate the determining object; as, to call by name; I judge by his dress that he is poor. I saw by his glance that he was a rogue; accompanied and attended take by of persons, with (commonly) of things; we say, surrounded by.

C c Roman. 𝔇 𝔠 Black Letter. 𝒞 𝒸 Script.

C, c, 1 sē; 2 cē, n. [CEES, C's, or Cs, 1 sēz; 2 cēs, pl.] 1. The third letter in the English alphabet.

C is from L. and stood for both Gr. g and Gr. k, k being an incongruous form in a rounded alphabet. Originally it not only corresponded to Greek gamma but had the same sound. In early Latin inscriptions it was used with K, both for the g sound and the k sound. As the Romans disliked the letter K they introduced (3d century B. C.) a modified form of C, namely, G, for the voiced g sound, and restricted C to the voiceless k sound. This is the value of c in classical Latin. In modern English c has two regular sounds: (1) hard, like k, before a, o, u, l, and r; (2) soft, like s, before e, i, y, æ and œ. Final c, as in "music," is always hard. When combined with h the letter c has three different sounds: (1) indicated phonetically by the digraph ch or ch heard in "chair," "child," "church," etc.; (2) indicated by the digraph sh or sh heard in "chaise," "chevron," "chicane," etc.; (3) the sound of k, especially in words derived from Gr. as "chalcedony," "character," "chiropodist," etc. In certain other combinations, as "schedule," "school," etc., ch has the sound of k in the United States, but sometimes is silent as in "schism." There are also words in which c, when preceded by s and followed by ep, is pronounced as k, as in sceptic, which is frequently spelled phonetically, skeptic; and other words in which it is silent, as in "scepter." C is silent also in many other words, as in "czar," "indict," "muscle," "scene," "victuals," etc.

2. A symbol noting: (1) The third in a class, order, group, or series; three as a number or numeral; also, a numeral in the Roman notation (C = 100; CC = 200; CCC = 300; C = 100,000). This symbol, which was originally ⊙, a modified form of the Greek Θ, was later changed to C and considered as the initial of the Latin centum. (2) Mus. (a) One of a series of tones, at intervals of an octave, given, in modern International pitch, by about 522 vibrations a second or by 522 multiplied or divided by any power of 2: used sometimes as a standard pitch-tone, especially in theoretical discussions; also, the third tone in the relative major scale: A minor. (b) The key giving C for a key-note and beginning the natural or major scale. (c) On a keyed instrument, any key giving C. (d) In written music, any note representing C.
